

Mattingly may give up

■ BASEBALL: The Yankee's first baseman may sit out the start of next season to see if he wants to retire

NEW YORK (AP) — Don Mattingly's baseball career is over — at least for now. All that remains is his final announcement.

A person who has been in contact with Mattingly's advisers said Monday the free agent first baseman will issue a statement saying he won't be playing at the start of next season. He said the announcement could come as early as Tuesday.

The source, who spoke on the condition he not be identified, confirmed the account first reported Saturday by The New York Times. Mattingly's agent, Jim Krivacs, did not return telephone messages.

New York Yankees manager Joe Torre said during a conference call he had no idea of the team captain's plans and had not heard that Mattingly was going to retire.

Mattingly, who will be 35 on April 20, wants to see how he likes retirement. He hit .288 last season with just seven homers and 49 RBI in 458 at-bats, getting a $4.02 million salary in the final season of a $19.3 million, five-year contract he agreed to in April 1990, about three months before severe back pain struck.

Mattingly, who came up to the Yankees for good in 1983, has been at times outwardly unhappy about the team and owner George Steinbrenner. He has a .307 career average, 2,153 hits, 222 homers and 1,099 RBI.

Cotton Bowl: Promoters are confident that Oregon and Colorado will draw fans

They were selling cotton candy in the stand of the Oregon State game the other night."

Colorado expects many of its 3,600 alumni in Texas to buy tickets.

"Our fans, when it comes New Year's Day games, have usually gone ape," said Dave Plati, Colorado's sports information director.

He said Colorado has sold its ticket allotment or more for all four of its New Year's bowl appearances since 1989.

Colorado has been to 19 bowl games since 1938, most recently defeating Notre Dame 41-24 in the 1995 Fiesta Bowl.

The Buffs have 14 players from Texas on their roster, which also should help Texas ticket sales, Plati said.

That list includes Mission product Koy Detmer, who injured his right knee in a 29-21 victory over Texas A&M. The junior quarterback later had season-ending surgery.

Oregon is a different matter.

The Ducks have played in 10 bowls, losing last season's Rose Bowl 38-20 to Penn State. The Ducks took 40,000 fans to Pasadena.

However, Oregon lists just 1,200 Texas alums and no Texas players.

"But we'll probably sell 18,000 to 20,000 tickets," said Paul Ihander, an assistant in Oregon's sports information office.

But there is a little history. Each school has appeared once in the Cotton Bowl and plans reunions of those squads, Crawford said.

Colorado lost to Rice 28-14 in the 1938 Cotton Bowl, when the Buffaloes were led by Byron "Whizzer" White.

Oregon last appeared in 1949 with future NFL great Norm Van Brocklin at quarterback and lost 21-13 to Southern Methodist and Heisman winner Doak Walker.

Greg Elam, of the Dallas Convention and Visitors Bureau, said last season's Cotton Bowl had a total economic impact of $78 million on the Dallas area economy.

"In theory, not having a Texas school in this game will help because there will be more out-of-town people coming here and making it adventure," Elam said. "But in reality, it will be dependent on how many of those people will travel to Dallas."
