COTTON BOWL

OREGON VS COLORADO

THE ROAD TO THE COTTON BOWL

The fastest and safest route from Eugene to Dallas, Texas, is to drive south on Interstate 5, until arriving in Los Angeles. Then take Interstate 10 into Texas and get onto Interstate 20 northeast towards Dallas.

Die-hard Oregon fans face long trip to Dallas

■ ROAD TRIP: A couple of traveling options await Dallas-bound Oregon fans

The trip from Eugene to Dallas, Texas, takes 3-5 days on the road, covers 1,500 miles of desolate highways and desert and is not at all for the squeamish, but it's still the best way to get to the Cotton Bowl.

Sure, it would be easier to fly there — and a lot less time consuming — but how many times will there be a chance to pile into an over-packed car with a few friends, eat bad food and party your Duck tails off for two weeks with no responsibilities? This is what college is all about — not grades and diplomas — so take advantage of it.

Since the weather will be harsh in late December, and there is only a few days to get to Dallas after the holidays, the easiest road to Cotton is Interstate 5 south.

Starting off in the early morning from Eugene, there is not much to do between here and Sacramento except to ponder the future, and past, and which tape to listen to next.

About 30 miles south of the
