Gospel ensemble's concert honoring Martin Luther King

■ MUSIC: Director tries to further the message of Martin Luther King Jr. through her choir

By Elisabeth Forsythe
Freelance Reporter

"I live, eat, breathe and sleep gospel music."

So says Julia Neufeld, director of the University Gospel Ensemble. The ensemble, which will perform a concert in honor of Martin Luther King Jr. today, offers a unique blend of music and religion to its members.

"It's a good haven where if you want to include religion you can, but if not, it's not preached," said Steve Bender. Bender, a junior marketing major, joined because he hadn't participated in music or religion lately, and he wanted it to keep him rooted.

It's kept Ellen Tevik, a senior math major, rooted for eight terms. She enjoys the music, "and when I became a Christian I wanted to praise God," she said. "I guess I'm one of those people for which there's a more religious meaning to me."

That meaning is strong for Neufeld, who was born in Louisiana to a minister. Her father once turned in his license to preach because he wasn't free to preach to people of all colors. Her family fought for civil rights while living in the Bible Belt, teaching her that people "should always fight for those less fortunate."

Neufeld remembers being taken out of school by her parents the day Martin Luther King Jr. was killed. "I was so sad," she said. "I had such feelings of remorse for his family and the process of desegregation. It felt like a total setback."

Neufeld believes King's dream is not dead.

"It hasn't evolved to where it should be, but I still feel those same little chills when I hear his 'I Have a Dream' speech — it hasn't lost its message," she said.

Neufeld tries to keep King's dream alive in the Gospel Ensemble. "I want to give a message about freedom in our musical expression — overcoming oppression and iniquities; I think we can all sing about that."

"I'm hoping for more participation, this term and next term, from the black students at large," she said. "African-American music is about African-Americans, and they could so heighten the process of the learning environment."

The Gospel Ensemble's concert will take place tonight at 7 p.m. in Room 150 Columbia. Neufeld is enthusiastic. "We may not have a large crowd, but if we have ten or 12, we're going!"

Parking permit costs increase this year for students, faculty

■ PARKING: Official cites rising operating costs as justification for the hike

Tired of on-campus parking hassles?

They're not likely to disappear anytime soon. The cost of University parking permits will increase by $2 for students and $3 for faculty and staff, said George Hecht, director of campus operations.

The increase is to offset the growing cost of campus operations, he said. Parking prices have not increased since 1987, while the cost of maintaining and monitoring parking has, Hecht said.

The University has no plans to build a parking garage, as proposed in 1987. The idea was rejected because the community did not support it, he said.

"There was a lot of community opposition, and we had to accept the fact that people just did not want a large parking structure," Hecht said.

The University has done what it can to make parking on campus easier, he said.

Finding a parking spot near campus is still a difficult endeavor and as a result, the University has tried to promote other forms of transportation. For example, it has provided bike racks and improved local bike paths, Hecht said.

In addition, $95,000 of student fees is used to pay for free bus service for all University students.
