Hyundai location a controversy; 'Water Forum' discusses issue

WETLAND: Community members and students consider plant location, development and growth

By Doug Irving
Student Activities Reporter

People need to educate and involve themselves with the Hyundai plant controversy, a group of speakers said Thursday night.

Community members and students discussed the Hyundai development in front of about 50 people attending OSPIRG's "Water Forum." They approached the issue in different ways, but all urged students to make their own judgments.

"Please get involved and let people know how you feel about growth," said Mike Sullivan, Hyundai project manager for the city of Eugene.

Many of the speakers discussed the environmental aspects of the proposed Hyundai plant. The plant would be located in a wetland, according to Tom Pringle, who represented Citizens for Public Accountability.

"[The wetland] is a fairly precious place," he said. "This is really a world-class wetland next door. [The plant] is kind of unfortunately located."

However, Sullivan told the audience that the decisions that led to zoning the land for a factory "happened not quietly and not in private."

"Decisions are made periodically that have a big impact on how this community will look in the future," he said.

Dave Sweet, a candidate for mayor of Eugene, disputed this, claiming that the people had been ignored from the beginning.

Carl Yeh, the ASUO community affairs coordinator, told the audience the ASUO has taken a neutral stance "to be able to represent all the students."
