Football: Ducks need big-play guy

gy. It is like German to French or something like that," Koetter said. "Everybody runs the same plays, give or take a few things. How you communicate that to the players — the words you use, the catch-phrases you use, the terminology about the way your offense is set up — that is where difference is."

"He is really easy to work with," starting quarterback Tony Graziani said. "We have pretty much been on the same page since he has been here, and the transition has been pretty smooth."

The other obstacles may not be so simple to fix, however. The tailback situation is rumored to be a back-by-committee situation, and the long-term wide receiver prospects remain a question mark.

But, while replacing departed Ricky Whittle and Cristin McLemore will be no easy task, Koetter believes the Ducks have serious potential at both spots.

"We have a talented group of tailbacks that are working to replace Rick, and I also think that we are deeper at wide receiver than people give us credit for," Koetter said.

At the wide receiver positions, seniors-to-be Dameron Ricketts and Jibri Hodge and junior-to-be Jamaal Wallace have shown up big at times this spring, and the Ducks will have third-year receiver Pat Johnson back next fall.

As far as tailbacks go, the Ducks may go with a back-by-committee approach more out of desire than out of necessity. Koetter said, pointing out that Whittle sustained some serious injuries down the stretch last season because of the physical nature of the position. Redshirt freshman Darien Latimer and sophomores David Crump and Kevin Parker are the strongest candidates for that committee.

"With the pounding that position takes, it is hard for that guy to stay healthy," Koetter said. "So if you don't have three or four guys at that position, I think you are in trouble because only the luckiest of teams keep their tailback healthy all year round. It is just tough to keep that guy healthy."

"I think we will need them all. There is a lot to be said about having good depth."

And depth is something the Ducks have at several positions. At fullback, juniors-to-be A.J. Jelks and Eric Winn both got some experience last year, and Winn has impressed both Koetter and head coach Mike Bellotti this spring.

Oregon's offensive line is a seasoned group, and the starting lineup will probably be all seniors led by Paul Wiggins, a second team Pac-10 selection at tackle.

At tight end, Josh Wilcox and Christian Anderson are entering their senior seasons, while junior-to-be Blake Spence showed some consistency last year. And Koetter, who didn't use the fullback position at Boston College, said he isn't unaccustomed to using three tight ends in a formation, with the third being a fullback/tight end type of position.

The Oregon contingent of quarterbacks played well on Saturday, utilizing a combination of running backs and wide receivers to drive toward the endzone.

Seniors-to-be Graziani and Ryan Perry-Smith, along with sophomore Jason Maas and red-shirt freshman Justin Wilcox, give the Ducks good depth at a position that Koetter works closely with.

And, Graziani said, Koetter is a nice fit into the pass-oriented offense that the first-string play-caller favors.

"I am really comfortable with what we are doing," Graziani said. "We are kind of getting a little bit more into my strengths, and that is helping me a great deal — getting guys down the field a little bit more and getting a little bit more vertical like we tried to do last year but we kind of shied away from. It has kind of catered to my needs some."

"It is kind of refreshing to have a coach that wants to do what you are good at. I think that has only helped me."

But there is still one question lingering in Koetter's mind.

"When you lose two great offensive players like Ricky Whittle and Cristin McLemore, who were two big-play type of guys, the biggest question mark in my mind is who is going to step up and be that big-play guy."

For that, the Ducks will just have to wait and see.
