

AMANDA ERICKSON/Emerald

Billy Merrill, also competing in the Pow Wow shows his nephew, Joey Merrill, a few moves before the dancing really begins.

Event: A diverse tribal community comes together

celebration in McArthur Court. This year, because Mac Court is being re-roofed, the student group had to use Gerlinger Hall for the two-day event.

Barbara Weakey, a vendor at the Pow Wow, said this tradition is practiced all over the country. She and her partner, Harry, go to a different Pow Wow every weekend to gather with others and sell their hand-made crafts.

"There's a different Pow Wow every weekend somewhere," she said.

Lewis said NASU is a member of a state-wide network that celebrate Native American traditions and sponsor events like the Pow Wow.
