New courses introduced for fall term

■ CURRICULUM: New courses will be taught by adjunct professors at the School of Law

By Chris Hutchenson
Oregon Daily Emerald

Two new courses will be offered in the 1996-97 University of Oregon School of Law curriculum.

Health Law and Animal Law will expand the School of Law's coverage of legal topics.

In addition, two courses are being introduced again: White Collar Crime and Immigration Law.

According to University of Oregon Law Professor David Schuman, the interest in these courses is very high. The Law School added these experimental classes to "respond to areas of practice becoming more important and common," Schuman said.

The courses were approved by the School of Law Curriculum Committee as experimental courses that are not yet a permanent part of the curriculum. If there is enough ongoing student interest, these courses could become permanent after a couple of years.

"It would be nice if these courses could be offered on a recurring basis," Schuman said.

All four additional courses will be taught by adjunct professors. An adjunct professor is not a full-time instructor but rather a professional practitioner who teaches a class in his or her field of expertise.

"They bring a real-world perspective into the law school curriculum," Schuman said.

Health Law will be offered during fall term 1996. The two credit course will be taught by Kurt Hansen, Esq. of the law firm Schwabe, Williamson & Wyatt. The course will be a sequence of related lectures covering a variety of health-related legal issues such as government medical plans and their administration, and end-of-life issues such as advanced directives, confidentiality and malpractice.

Animal Law, also offered for two credits, will be taught during spring term 1997. Pamela Frasch, Esq. of the Animal Legal Defense Fund in Portland, Ore. and Scott Beckstead, Esq. of Waldport, Ore. will teach the course.

The course will cover state, federal and common-law treatment of animals as wildlife, laboratory subjects, companions, game and livestock. Topics include anti-cruelty legislation, veterinary malpractice and animal sacrifice. This course will be open to students in other disciplines on a limited basis.

White Collar Crime, offered for two credits during fall term 1996, focuses on embezzlement, bribery, tax fraud and other white-collar crimes. It will be taught by Chris Cardani, Esq., who is an assistant United States attorney in Eugene.

Immigration Law, offered for two credits during spring term 1997, will cover legal issues and laws regarding immigration in the United States. It will be taught by Paul Hribernick, Esq. of Portland, Ore.

For more information on any of the new courses, contact Professor David Schuman at the School of Law.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

On location Casting, C/W Productions and Warner Bros. are still looking for Extras for the movie "Pre." For one scene, they are in search of athletic looking students, men and women to recreate the '72 Olympics. In another, they will recreate the last party that Steve Pre-fontaine attended before his tragic death. Call 302-6228 if you are interested and available. Extras will be paid $40.00 for 8 hours plus time and a half after that. Be prepared to commit a whole day or night of shooting.
