Preview: Ducks test depth on defense

With the injuries piling up, Oregon's defensive depth chart for Saturday's game is filled with an inordinate number of redshirt and true freshman. Bellotti recognizes that playing such a significant amount of time early in a player's career can be mentally taxing, but it also presents a great opportunity to contribute.

"Players come to play and to join a program to get on the field," said Bellotti. "Now they have a great opportunity, maybe earlier in their career than they would have thought possible."

"Right now we have to hold the fort until the reinforcements arrive. In that regard, it's not very much fun to think about going into a game without your top two defensive linemen [Mark Schmidt and Bryant Jackson] or two of your starters in your secondary [Brandon McLemore and Michael Fletcher]."

The young defensive players, as well as the veterans, will be challenged by a UCLA offense coached by former Oregon offensive coordinator Al Borges and led by quarterback Cade McNown.

"This offense presents problems whether [our defense] is healthy or not," claimed Bellotti.

Redshirt freshman inside linebacker Peter Sirmon agrees that what makes McNown dangerous is his running ability.

"He's a good athlete and he brings more to the game than just passing," he said. "The toughest quarterback to stop is the one that can hurt you on the run."

On the offensive side for Oregon, quarterback Ryan Perry-Smith will start his fourth-straight game in place of the injured Tony Graziani. While he has put up great statistics in the last two games, Perry-Smith and the offense have had trouble scoring in the first half of the game and when they have been lined up in the red zone.

"Everybody is frustrated that we haven't scored more points," admitted Perry-Smith.

"We have put up great numbers in terms of yards," Bellotti said. "But as I have said before, yards are not the judge of things. Obviously, at the point we're at as a team, we need to take advantage of any time we cross the 50. We have to see points."

And the Ducks also need to see a "1" in the Pac-10 win column or the significance of the coming weeks' games will significantly decrease.
