Washington's Ink Aleaga (54) led his team into Husky Stadium last season against the Ducks. The teams face off at Autzen Stadium on Saturday.

Ducks seek third-straight vs UW

PREVIEW: Several key Oregon defensive players should be back from injuries

If there was ever a time to win a game, Oregon knows it is now.

Not only are the Ducks winless in their last four games and in the Pacific-10 Conference, but the Washington Huskies (3-1 Pac-10, 4-2 overall) come marching into Eugene seeking revenge for two-straight losses against Oregon (0-4 Pac-10, 3-4 overall).

The good news for the Ducks is the return of several players who have been seeing limited action in the last couple of games. A bye last weekend gave Oregon a much-needed rest.

"I would say this is the healthiest we've been since the first or second game," head coach Mike Bellotti said. "Hopefully we'll get Mark Schmidt back. He hasn't really played in the last two games. Bryant Jackson has been hobbling with foot and ankle problems. But a week off is not going to change that. He's just playing through the pain."

"The two biggest gains this week are outside linebackers Reggie Jordan and Derrick Barnes. Certainly the week off last week and the extra rehab time should help them dramatically. More importantly, getting those four guys back will take the load off of our redshirt freshmen."

The Ducks' defense will be tested against Washington's running game. The Huskies are averaging about 32 points and 162 rushing yards a game. Leading the pack is Corey Dillon, who has rushed for 648 yards this season including a 145-yard, five-touchdown game last weekend against UCLA.

Rashaan Shehee, Washington's leading rusher last season, has seen limited action in recent weeks after injuring his foot when jumping off a balcony at a party.

He did not play against the Bruins and is questionable for Saturday.

Oregon defensive coordinator Rich Stubler called both Dillon and Shehee excellent players.

"Dillon can really run the football," Stubler said. "He's a behind-the-pads, no-nonsense kind of runner."

"Shehee is a different guy. He will dart to the hole. He picks a place, sees it and lowers his pads. And he's a load at 225 [pounds]. If he gets into the open field he has got the speed to break it."

Defensively, the Huskies bring strongside linebacker Jason Chorak, who already has 10 sacks and 15.5 tackles-for-losses this season. But it is Washington's inside linebackers who are the real threats. John Fiala and Ink Aleaga have combined for 111 tackles this season.

Bellotti believes this powerful trio will keep the Ducks' offensive line on its toes.

"Washington's front four come with reckless abandon," Bellotti said, "and occasionally they'll send in the safeties and inside linebackers, which puts added pressure on the line to determine
