

President wraps up vacation, looks toward his second term

■ VACATION: After a week of golf and rest, Washington business awaits Clinton

His Caribbean vacation over, President Clinton is wasting no time in setting a tone for his second term, planning a series of public events this week to highlight his policy priorities.

The president and his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, wrapped up a week of rest and relaxation Sunday, including four quiet days on a Caribbean island. Embraced by warm sea breezes and afforded privacy they rarely get at home, the first couple pronounced the visit a "perfect" vacation.

Returning to work Monday, Clinton starts a schedule for the two weeks before Inauguration Day aiming to underscore a theme central to his re-election campaign: the federal government working more closely with other segments of society to achieve progress on thorny problems such as strengthening education.

During his vacation, Clinton's aides announced he would lead a Camp David retreat for members of his old and new Cabinets. The private session is meant as an opening opportunity to discuss second-term priorities.

On St. Thomas, Clinton stuck mainly to golf and rest.

The first couple had talked of boating to nearby St. John on Sunday and walking the nature trails in heavily wooded Virgin Island National Park. But at the last minute they opted for less-taxing pursuits at the 3,700-square-foot Sand Dollar villa overlooking Magen's Bay, which served as their vacation retreat.

White House spokeswoman Mary Ellen Glynn said they spent the morning reading and working a jigsaw puzzle. The president and Mrs. Clinton were out past midnight, dining at a local open-air restaurant. The president had the special of the day — a plate of "Old Wife" fish — washed down with a nonalcoholic drink made from an apple-like local fruit called soursop.

It was the Clintons' first visit to St. Thomas, the easternmost outpost of the United States. Once they're back in Washington's political fray, it may seem a distant memory.

The Republican-controlled Congress is opening Tuesday with its own priorities, including an eagerness to investigate irregularities in Democratic campaign fund-raising.

Clinton is putting a spotlight this week on cooperative ventures outside the capital. On Monday, he's attending an ecumenical breakfast at the White House, and administration officials said he will stress that a national unity of purpose is necessary to overcome such social ills as racial intolerance.
