Students enrolled in Oregon Forests weekend workshop class discover the hidden treasures of Trestle Creek Falls, 20 miles east of Cottage Grove. Instructor Mel Jackson led the group on an instructional tour of Oregon forest plants, animals, history and geology including hikes among 500-year-old trees.

Online: Creators unsure anything digital will ever replace books

"The industry that's really alive right now, that really has an audience and is profitable, is the book industry," Rutten said. "Book sales in this country have never been as strong. The interactive industry still has to prove that."

"The Web is producing more heat than light," agreed Eamon Dolan, the senior editor at HarperCollins' new line of cyberish books, HarperEdge.

"The book is an affirmation of a technology that's been around for 400 years," he added. "This imprint is not about boosting technology. It's a very nice hammer, but it's still a hammer."

Dolan's imprint is, however, about grabbing some of the hottest names on the Web and having them sit down to write the kind of 50,000-word treatises no one in his or her right mind would ever read online.

Titles like "What Will Be: Our Lives in the 21st Century" by Michael Dertouzos, with a foreword by a software salesman out of Seattle named Bill Gates. Or "The Soul of Cyberspace" by Jeffrey Zaleski, on the spiritual side of virtual reality.

It's exactly this question of word count, more than anything else, that frames the debate: Long vs. short, quick vs. slow.
