■ BUDGET: Some student organizations received more money than they requested

By Dana Williams
Multicultural Issues Reporter

The ASUO Programs Finance Committee approved five budgets last night, increasing two, decreasing one and keeping one the same.

American Institute of Architecture Students (AIAS) asked for $755 — a $6 decrease from last year's budget. The committee approved the proposed budget after a debate on whether to allocate more funds than AIAS requested. Although the group did not get an increase in their 1996-97 budget, the committee felt AIAS spent last year's funds responsibly. The committee noted AIAS raised twice as much money in fund raising last year than it asked for from the ASUO.

The committee awarded Disability Service Project (DSP) $400 more than they asked for. DSP requested $10,100 for the individual services that they provide to University students with disabilities. The committee's decision for the increase to $10,500 reflects the state mandated increase in the minimum wage. Committee members said they did not want the program to cut hours from its services to compensate for the wage difference.

The Constitutional Court received $2,166 for its 1996-97 budget, the group asked for $2,206. The increases will affect advertising and the directors' stipend. The committee said an increase in funds was appropriate because the law requires that the Constitutional Court advertise court rulings to University students, and because students should have the opportunity to take part in their government. The director's position took a $105 loss last year and this year's increase is an effort to create a standardization of stipend positions.

The Committee for Musical Arts asked for $4,800 and received $4,625. Their allocated funds were 3% more than last year's. The Committee for Musical Arts discussed plans to recruit famous musicians to play for University students. The program offers students a chance to compose music and then have the professional artist perform students pieces. The group plans to use the extra funds to rent performance space outside of the School of Music.

Forensics, the University's debate group, received the same amount as their 1995-96 budget. The committee approved the group's request for $14,850 for their 1996-97 budget. The group uses their money to send University students to national debates. Forensics also works with the Commentator, ASUO candidates and class professors to facilitate debates.
