

Senate examines SETA's budget

MEETING: The Student Health Center was allocated funds to cover extra costs

By Angle Suchy Student Activities Edito

The ASUO Student Senate funded $200 in costs for the Date Rape Mock Trial and sent representatives from Students for the Ethical Treatment of Animals home Wednesday during a relatively short meeting.

Students for the Ethical Treatment of Animals was appealing the Senate after asking the Programs Finance Committee for a 1,384 percent increase. However, SETA's PFC budget hearing was postponed to Saturday, at which time it is predicted that their budget will receive about an 8 percent increase. It was decided that postponing the SETA budget should not be referred to as an appeal and the SETA representatives were excused.

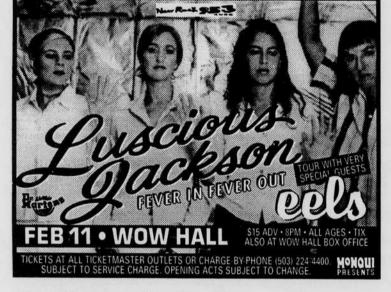

Annie Dochnahl, student health center health educator, asked for a minimum of $100 from the surplus budget funds to cover a portion of the $800 costs leftover from the "JustUs" mock rape trial last month at the University. The Senate agreed to use $200 toward the SHC request from the surplus funding.

During committee reports, it was announced that any student who wants to run for office for the 1997-98 school year must collect 500 signatures.

The Programs Finance Committee reported a 7.8 percent increase in the student group budgets thus far for the upcoming school year.

The EMU Board representative reported that the lease for the Footnotes space in the EMU ends this year, and the EMU Board is examining whether or not to extend the group's lease.

Senator Bill Miner encouraged the Senate Rules Committee to adopt an official Ethics Committee because of a lack of method to discipline student Senators other than for minor violations.

Goode performance group comes to town

The San Francisco-based Joe Goode Performance Group will be hosting a workshop tonight at 6 p.m. in the EMU Ben Linder Forum. The performance group is in town for two Eugene performances on Friday and Saturday at the Hult Center.

Goode has been awarded fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts and the California Arts Council. Goode has also received numerous other national awards for his dance works and performance/ installation works.

The Joe Goode Performance Group was founded in 1986 and has toured throughout the U.S. as well as in South America, Canada and Europe. According to news releases, the company is well respected within the dance, movement and performance art worlds and has a good reputation for its community-based residencies and workshops.

The proposed workshops include a creation of a personal history by putting life experiences on paper, or turning them into literary works or performance pieces. The session may also cover a text and movement workshop, which uses movement as it is inspired by the spirit or emotional quality or literal interpretation of a text.

The performance group has expressed interest in working with the gay community, but all are welcome. Twelve participants have registered for the free workshop and registration is recommended but not required. Interested persons may sign up in the Lesbian Gay Bisexual Transgender Alliance office in Room 319 of the EMU.

Facility: Site could affect environment

A Junction City businessman showed concern for what kind of image the prison site might cast on the community.

"I think we need to consider the broader aspect of what siting this type of facility is going to do to the community and the image throughout the country," said Eric Nill of Guaranty Dealerships.

Strader said it's important for the community to investigate the social issues, but she said the impact in other cities with prisons has not been noticeable.

"Lots of people say, 'We don't want to be known as a prison town,'" she said. "It doesn't thwart development."

Thousands of migratory birds inhabit the parcels of land proposed for the Mill Iron site, and Nill said he was concerned about the environmental repercussions of a facility on the land.

"Geese don't seem to mind that people behind walls are not model citizens," Strader said, citing examples of the state penitentiary in Salem.

Another Junction City resident said the prison site seems like it's being forced on the community.

"In a sense, it's kind of like the 500-pound gorilla," said Gary Crum. He said it sits wherever it wants to.

"This is your community," Strader said, and he urged residents to suggest a better site that is less intrusive.

Update meetings will be held Feb. 14 and 25 at Lane Community College, and citizens will have an opportunity to ask questions and make suggestions.
