DeYoung: Wilkins will be hard to replace

recent weeks with the team concept, but if the Ducks hope to get anywhere next season, it may be up to him to be the emotional leader for the younger players.

Oregon's fifth starter, Jamar Curry, will be working with a new line-up where he too may have to become a mentor. He will be the most experienced player on the court, and don't be surprised if he gets on Green's list of who needs to perform in order for the team to win. The list this year is Wilkins, Lawrence and Milling. Who else could be on that list next year?

Oregon doesn't really have anybody like Arizona's Mike Bibby on the team — someone who was talked about before he even stepped a foot on the court and who was expected to lead his team in his freshman year. Maybe that is a bad thing because it puts too much on the shoulders of someone with minimal experience.

But will there be anyone next year who will be the "star?" Who is next on the list of the feared, yet respected Oregon players like Orlando Williams and Wilkins? Will the team be able to function if no one steps up to take on the role?

It is more than just replacing the points, rebounds, assists and minutes the four seniors make up. It is filling the psychological roles of team leaders and players that can be counted on to play consistently hard and with emotion.

There is no doubt that next season's team will have a whole new look to it with the absence of just four players. The biggest question is if the team will be able to come together and fill the big shoes that Wilkins, Lawrence, Ramaker and Milling are leaving behind.

Navarro beat Alex Osterrieth and Ed Carter 8-4. Also for the Ducks, Miguel Arriaga took Chris Bjorkman to three sets before losing 6-7, 6-2, 7-6.

Coach Chris Russell was encouraged by Oregon's performance in Arizona this weekend.

"The guys battled and played some good tennis this weekend," Russell said. "We will see good results coming soon. We are improving as a team."

The Ducks look forward to a two-match homestand next week when they play host to Portland at the Eugene Swim and Tennis Club on Feb. 14 at 3 p.m.; and UC Santa Barbara at the Willow Creek Racquet Club on Feb. 16, at 1 p.m.
