Move: Road to cross will be closed

the cross controversy. After voting on the proposal, Councilman Bobby Lee asked, "Does that put an end to this whole chapter now?"

Without U.S. District Court approval, the book is yet to be concluded. A city attorney will be busy drafting the bible college proposal for a March 29 court hearing, but without court acceptance, it will be back to the drawing board for the city.

If the court grants the recommendation, city attorney Glenn

Klein said city manager Vicki Elmer would be in the position to start the effort to relocate the cross.

In a new development regarding the cross controversy, citizens will no longer be able to drive to the current location of the cross atop Skinner Butte after March 21 because of maintenance difficulties due to cutbacks from Measure 47.

In a press release, Bob Hammitt, maintenance director for Public Works, said the deteriorated condition of the road, reduced staffing and vandalism and criminal activity occurring near the cross have all led to the closing of the access road.

Hammitt said these problems could not be remedied because the money that would pay for staff to both fix the road and other vandalism would have to come from the city's general fund. The general fund is being reduced by the onset of Measure 47.

Hammitt said the access road will be closed until further notice.
