A spring break to remember

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is the winning submission of two entries in the Oregon Daily Emerald spring break story contest.

Our spring break was filled with satanic surprises that we would like to share with the rest of the student body.

Our trip started off with a bang when we drove furiously out of Eugene at 7:00 a.m. on Saturday. We arrived in Las Vegas at 11:30 p.m. after an exhausting drive through the hideous state of Nevada.

We experienced the Joseph and Mary syndrome in trying to find a motel to stay in except no one even offered us a stable to stay in.

So, three hours later, after we had begged twenty hotel managers unsuccessfully, we sullenly agreed to spend the night in our tiny Honda Accord together.

Now let me tell you something, four people in a crowded car filled with sleeping bags, stuffed animals, and cheetos (orange death), start to obtain a peculiar odor after a few hours.

The camel's back broke with the last straw being a horrible nasal snore that was emitted from either tweety bird or my friend, Tory. I leaped from the car, determined to find a room to rest my sleepy head in peace. I surveyed the tiny apartment complex building we had parked at and marched off to the first room that had light.

To my joyous surprise, I found a recently vacated room with the doors wide open. I sprinted back to the car, screamed some incoherent phrases, and led my friends back to the open room like the pied piper himself. After the initial adrenalin rush, I soon realized that I had not found my own personal pimp palace. The room was filled with a lice-infested bed with burnt hot dogs and sauerkraut spilled on the floor. My friends slept on the bed while I opted for the dirty shag carpet floor.

We felt a little remorse over breaking and entering, but I had always wanted to be arrested before my 21st birthday, and I felt like this was as good a time as any.

Luckily, we remained unscathed from this adventure, but Satan threw us a few other curve balls in the City of Sin. Some obstacles included my friend, Julie, losing her car keys, a broken trunk, crushed sunglasses and a random, sunbathing eighty-year-old naked man whose wrinkled image is forever etched upon my memory. Needless to say, our spring break was pretty memorable.
