TWA evidence points to mechanical failure

1 WASHINGTON — Current evidence points to a "catastrophic mechanical failure" and not a terrorist attack in the crash last July of TWA Flight 800, FBI Director Louis Freeh said Sunday.

Freeh, interviewed on NBC's Meet the Press, said neither the FBI nor the National Transportation Safety Board have reached a final conclusion as to what caused the crash off Long Island that killed the 230 people aboard the Boeing 747 on July 17.

But the "evidence is certainly not moving in the direction of a terrorist attack," Freeh said. "It is in fact moving in the other direction."

He also discounted speculation that a missile, possibly from a Navy training exercise, downed the plane.

Freeh said the FBI and NTSB hoped to issue its findings by mid- or late summer.

Chess champ feels "blue" after losing

2 NEW YORK — Score one for the techies. IBM's Deep Blue computer defeated world chess champion Garry Kasparov on Sunday, evening their six-game series at one game apiece.

Kasparov resigned after the computer's 45th move, which put Deep Blue in position for a winning endgame. The game lasted just short of four hours.

Kasparov, a 34-year-old Russian, defeated Deep Blue in Saturday's opening game of the series, when the computer resigned after Kasparov's 45th move.

Kasparov defeated the computer last year and says barring human error, man will always be better than the machine at chess. But IBM technicians said they had improved Deep Blue since the last match — the machine can now examine an average of 200 million positions per second.

Washington D.C.: The next Disneyland?

3 WASHINGTON — So you've done the D.C. of picture postcards. You've strolled the grassy Mall and schlepped through the museums and monuments. What's next? Plenty.

The sprawling new Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial has just opened, the World War II memorial will be done in a few years and close to a dozen other museums and memorials have been OK'd for the Mall or nearby.

It's enough to make people ask when is enough enough.

Among the future attractions: museums about American Indians, medicine, the Army; memorials to Martin Luther King, George Mason, Thomas Paine, black Revolutionary War patriots, women in the military and others.

Sites for another 10 museums and 60 memorials are expected to be needed in the next 50 years if the trend continues.
