Members of Friars, a senior honorary, watch while Weston Morrill, Dean of Student Life helps to dedicate a tree in honor of Mary Hudzikiewicz, retiring Assistant Dean of Student Life. University Day provided an opportunity for students to plant trees and flowers, powerwash and beautify neglected areas of campus.

Campus: University Day first held in 1910s

for a manicure, and in just one day, and a sunny day at that, when hanging out in the quad is the norm. But participating really means a lot to some students.

"I've been looking forward to this day for a while," said fine arts major John Burton. "I've been doing research for a project I'm working on about campus history. They used to make sidewalks that ran between buildings, but now we just plant flowers. It's a really beautiful campus, and I like having the opportunity to make it look better."

The first University Day is believed to have been in the 1910s, but for some reason it fell by the wayside during the 1940s. In 1990, two students resurrected the idea and participation has grown every year since.

"One of the things I like about University Day is hearing students walk through campus later and say, 'I planted that' or 'I painted that,'" said University Day director Eric Hudzikiewicz. "It's just a big campus get-together."

Students were able to participate by signing up at registration tables in front of Chapman and Condon halls. By 11:30 a.m., approximately 250 students had volunteered their services. All students who participated received a free T-shirt.
