ty jail as well as maintain county services that would otherwise be reduced or cut due to the estimated $3.8 million shortfall mandated by Measure 47 was passed by voters in Tuesday's election. As of 9 p.m., 32,806 people voted against the measure and 31,298 voted for the one-year levy.

Official state results will not be available until the beginning of June, according to the Secretary of State's office.

Two state measures were on the ballot. Measure 50, the rewrite of Measure 47, passed in Lane County by just under 4,000 votes. While 33,173 voted in favor of the measure, 29,992 voted against it. Latest numbers released by the Associated Press at 9 p.m. on Tuesday said it passed with 368,082 "yes" votes, or 56 percent, to 290,484 "no" votes, or 44 percent, with 45 percent of precincts throughout the state reporting. In order for Measure 50 to pass at least 50 percent of the eligible voters in the state must cast ballots and then a majority of those votes must support the measure.

Measure 49, which modifies the existing state prison work program requirements in the Oregon Constitution, passed in Lane County with 55,381 votes. The measure passed overwhelmingly in the rest of the state with almost 582,220, or 91 percent, of the voters supporting the measure, according to the Associated Press.

Money: Fund discussion will be deferred than once.

Wiley said she believed many citizens think urban renewal money could be used to fund cultural and recreational programs.

However, Lew Bowers, city director of community development, said state law mandates the use of money collected for urban renewal to fulfill the plans and benefit the district. But if the district were terminated, Bowers said, the money could not be used to fund recreation or cultural services.

"People want to know is there a quick fix or a silver bullet and the answer is clearly no," Bowers said.

Complicating the issue even further is the individual way urban renewal districts are treated under Measure 5, Measure 47 and could be treated under Measure 50 if it passes. In addition to the elections, the state legislature has yet to define how urban renewal is affected by Measure 47, Bowers said.

"The one thing that seems consistent through each of these is that there is very little to no money that will flow to the city's bottom line by termination of the district," Wiley said.

With this uncertainty in mind, City Council President Laurie Swanson Gribkov said the council decided to defer the discussion until June 18, when both the elections and the legislature's definition will be clearer.

Gribkov said the council realizes the city would not gain money in its general fund to add back services by terminating the riverfront district, but the issue in her mind is what direction the city wishes to go in regard to funding the project.
