Finals: Jazz led by seven late in game

Those were the last of 27 points by Pippen, whose status for Game 1 was doubtful until a couple of hours before gametime. Pippen also had nine rebounds despite a soft tissue injury on his left foot.

John Stockton, who scored 16 points and had 12 assists, put Utah back ahead 82-81 on a three-pointer with 51 seconds left. Fifteen seconds later, Jeff Hornacek was called for a touch foul on Jordan, who made one of two shots to tie the game at 82.

Stockton then dribbled the shot clock down and missed a screened three-pointer, and Malone, a 77 percent foul shooter, was fouled in the race for the loose ball. His two misses were reminiscent of Game 7 of the 1996 Western Conference finals against Seattle, when he missed a pair in the final 10 seconds that could have put Utah in the finals.

Jordan and Pippen were the only players to score in double figures for Chicago. Rodman had four points and 12 rebounds.

Hornacek had 11 points for the Jazz, whose precision shooting and crisp passing seemed to stun a United Center crowd looking forward to a fifth NBA title in seven years for their team.

Stockton also had seven of Utah's playoff-high 18 turnovers, and the Jazz shot only 7-for-11 at the foul line.

"The first game is always the toughest — I don't care what anybody says," Jordan said. "Utah came in and played extremely well. I'm sure they're going to take a moral victory from tonight's game."

Utah led through most of the fourth quarter, but the Bulls finally went ahead thanks to two of Stockton's mistakes.

Able to beat his man twice in a row, he dribbled into the lane and left his feet without knowing what he would do. Both mistakes resulted in turnovers, and Chicago capitalized with a 6-0 run.

Jordan had the first four points on jumper and an 8-foot bank shot, and Longley's jumper put the Bulls ahead 76-75 with 3 1/2 minutes left.

It was a game that started and ended poorly for Malone. He missed seven of his first eight shots, including two layups, over the first seven minutes. But the Jazz got a boost late in the period from backup point guard Howard Easley, whose consecutive jumpers in the final 33 seconds gave the Jazz an 18-17 lead after one quarter.

Utah eventually got its lead up to seven points on a three-pointer by Stockton with 3:02 left in the half, and the Jazz led 42-38 at halftime after a three-pointer by Russell with 5.5 seconds left.
