

Search for truth requires involvement

Close your eyes and imagine David Duchovny. He's wearing a double-breasted black silk suit. His hair is flawless in its boyish fluffiness, and his eyes stare right through you. He is talking about truth.

"The truth is out there," he says. "We must not be afraid to seek it out, to search tirelessly beyond the institutions we trust, for in those staid and familiar cottages of knowledge, we will find the most horrific truths of all."

You can tell he believes what he's saying. His voice fluctuates just where it needs to prove his conviction.

Duchovny is on fire beneath that cool veneer of acting prowess he possesses. You start to believe in his truth. "Maybe," you tell yourself. "Just maybe..."

Now imagine the man you saw protesting outside Eugene's Federal Building two days ago is standing before you. Imagine the four-days-without-a-bath hippie banging his bongos at the Saturday Market. Imagine his ratty dreads, his yellowed teeth and his strong odor speaking those same words that David so eloquently spoke. His suit is multi-colored and more patch than pants. He wears no shoes and has a six-day growth darkening his face.

"The truth is out there," man he says. "We've just got to make them hear us. 'Cause when they know that we're watching, they'll break. They'll run. Then, within those files kept by the perpetually oppressive Man, we'll find the most horrific truths."

You look at him. Blankly. You're telling yourself, "Yeah, right. You freak. Aliens, racists eco-destroyers, oh my! You expect me to believe the government has a conscious plan to deceive me, to rape my planet and kill people with darker skin than me? Give me a break."

"And no, I don't have any change."

This is what slays me about
