Jacques Cousteau dies at age 87

■ SEA: Cousteau became a household name through his documentaries and TV shows

By Christopher Burns
The Associated Press

PARIS — He shared his undersea adventures with millions of TV viewers worldwide, revealing the enchanting, hidden life that lay beneath the waves. Jacques Cousteau died Wednesday at 87, having left his mark on generations.

Cousteau invoked the heavens to explain his connection to the sea. "When you dive," he once said, "you begin to feel that you're an angel. It's a liberation of your weight."

Cousteau's foundation referred to one of his most noted documentaries in announcing his death. "Jacques-Yves Cousteau has rejoined the Silent World," it said in a statement.

His wife, Francine, said Cousteau died at home in Paris before dawn after suffering a respiratory infection and heart problems. Cousteau reportedly had been ill for months.

"But his voice continues to be heard," Francine Cousteau said, vowing to "continue his struggle" by finishing the Calypso II, the research ship he was building to replace the Calypso, which sank last year.

Cousteau — wiry, bespectacled and often wearing a red wool cap

— became a household name primarily through his hugely popular television series, "The Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau," and his many documentaries.

But Cousteau's 60-year odyssey, much of it on the Calypso, involved more than his life as a filmmaker or great adventurer.

He was also an environmentalist and inventor who co-developed the Aqua-Lung, created a one-man jet-propelled submarine and helped start the first manned undersea colonies.

Cousteau, said French President Jacques Chirac, was a legend who "represented the defense of nature, modern adventure, invention of the possible."
