Union files grievance for Phillips, hearing today

■ MLB: The Angels' utility player has been suspended since Aug. 10

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — In an effort to get Tony Phillips back on the field, the Major League Baseball Players Association filed a grievance Tuesday seeking to overturn his indefinite suspension.

Phillips, facing a felony charge of cocaine possession, was suspended indefinitely Monday by the Anaheim Angels. Arbitrator Richard Bloch will hear the case Wednesday in New York.

Because players and owners fired their permanent arbitrator on July 30, Bloch was selected Tuesday as an interim arbitrator to handle this case. In April 1984, he lifted a drug-related suspension commissioner Bowie Kuhn had given to Pascual Perez, and shortened Kuhn's suspensions of Willie Wilson and Jerry Martin from one year to approximately six weeks.

Bloch declined to overturn the suspension of Vida Blue from July 26, 1984, through the remainder of that season.

Phillips hasn't played since Aug. 10, when he was arrested in a motel at Anaheim, Calif. The Angels suspended their leadoff hitter after he turned down the team's request to go on the disabled list and take part in a drug rehabilitation program.

According to a baseball management source, the suspension was ordered by Michael Eisner, chief executive officer of the Angels' parent company, The Walt Disney Co.

Given the history of suspensions in grievance hearings, Bloch is likely to order the Angels to reinstate Phillips. The controlling precedent was set in 1980 after Texas Rangers pitcher Ferguson Jenkins was suspended indefinitely following his Aug. 25 arrest in Canada on charges of cocaine possession.

Kuhn suspended Jenkins indefinitely that Sept. 9 and the union filed a grievance. Arbitrator Raymond Goetz lifted the suspension on Sept. 22, ruling essentially that a player couldn't be penalized merely for an arrest, that a conviction was necessary.

Gene Orza, the No. 2 official of the players' association, said Tuesday he wouldn't comment while the case was pending. Randy Levine, the head of management's Player Relations Committee, also declined comment.

As part of the grievance, the union asked that the Angels be compelled to pay Phillips an additional $100,000 bonus for reaching 600 plate appearances. Phillips, who had 503 plate appearances, earned a $100,000 bonus for reaching 500 and would get an additional $100,000 for reaching 600.

Phillips, 38, was acquired in a midseason trade with the Chicago White Sox. He is batting .279 with 47 runs batted in and 77 walks.
