Concert: Attendance didn't meet ASUO expectations

plenish that fund, she said. The ASUO staffed a voters' registration table that signed up about 80 new voters within first hour, Project Coordinator Benjamin Kuhlman said.

But the bash was slow throughout the evening; program representatives guessed they had seen only a few hundred people.

Chefs from Tom's Tea House and Gourmet Pasta Co. worried they wouldn't sell the food they had brought to the event.

"I was planning for 1,000 (people)," said Sheilagh Earnest, owner of Gourmet Pasta Co. She motioned toward a near-empty East Lawn. "There's like 25. It's obvious [students] don't know or they'd be here." Brian Sacre watched the event from his Carson Residence Hall room. He was trying to get some Psychology reading out of the way, and the guitars and drums down stairs didn't seem to faze him.

The ASUO used smaller speakers to make sure the music didn't interfere with life inside Carson, Kroupa said. Nobody had complained to the Carson Area Desk when it closed at 7:30.

"I can drown it out," Sacre said. "It's not exactly my kind of music, but if that wasn't on I'd have my stereo on, anyway."
