

Paper: Misuse prevalent

charging anyone with a valid student ID card, ASUO President Bill Miner said. Student leaders would urge students to take more care with their printing.

Moseley said the ASUO had showed him the budget, and he had gone over the numbers. But he said that money had been figured into the budget.

"I said I would look at the situations," he said. "I'm looking further into it."

Everyone agreed that students would have to limit their paper waste for the University to consider any kind of reduction in charges.

University librarians had complained about picking up piles of discarded pages. Paper use plummeted at other universities when they began charging by the page.

Students need to start printing responsibly, Young said. They must continue to limit their printing even if the University agrees to stop charging by the page.

"If we fight for students, we have to have student cooperation," she said. "Students can only hurt themselves [by printing too much]. We need to nip that in the bud."

But more professors are putting class syllabi on the Internet, forcing students to print them if they want a hard copy. ASUO Vice President Ben Unger said. The per page charges force students to pay for their class schedules, he said.

"They're trying to shift the costs to students," he said. "That right there, I think, is the fundamental and the best argument we've got. And I think they realized how much they're asking when they ask for this."

Moseley expects to decide by early next week whether to continue the charges. He said he plans to meet with the ASUO to discuss his decision Tuesday or Wednesday.

"They made some good suggestions," Moseley said. "But we're going to have to greatly limit the paper."
