Frohnmayer: State funding causes shortfall

 sorb after years already spent trimming."

Frohnmayer also said the definition groups believed the University should define what a University education should be in the 21st century.

"This is a huge issue," he said, "daunting in size and potentially paralyzing in complexity."

The main educational mission for the millennium, Frohnmayer said, is to "transform lives through knowledge."

"We transform lives through unfettered inquiry, the synthesis of new knowledge and its generous transmission to our students and the world," he said.

To resolve these problems, solution groups will be created, which will have the goal of determining the best responses to the issues that the definition groups outlined, Frohnmayer said. He invited everyone to participate and voice their opinions so solutions can be reached.

"Nothing is off limits, nothing is off the table," he said, explaining that suggestions can include changing to semester-long classes, creating more cross-disciplinary classes and degree options or discontinuing the system of academic departments.

Frohnmayer said everyone should participate because the time has come to find solutions to the immediate problems the University faces so it can effectively prepare students for the next century.

"Would you send your child to the University of Oregon?" he asked. "Let us create the kind of university where the answer is an automatic 'Yes.'"

Dean: McGuire expresses mixed emotions will have to be managed like a business," he said.

Provost John Moseley said McGuire has been a strong leader at the University.

"He has done dynamic things in the college of business that I suspect we can continue, but we'll miss his leadership."

Moseley is meeting with the administrative council of the business college today to discuss selecting an interim dean.

During the three-and-a-half years he has been dean, McGuire said one of the greatest accomplishments the college has made was establishing a number of programs that focus on entrepreneurs. He said the best example is the reinvented MBA program that was introduced in the fall of 1996. At the end of the first year, the program won the U.S. Association of Small Business Entrepreneurs award.

"I care a great deal about the college of business and the University," he said. "The way I do a job is to put my heart and soul into the job."

Because of that, McGuire said he has mixed emotions about leaving the University.

"My view of the world of higher education is that increasingly higher education will have to be managed like a business."

"I'm excited about what I'm going to do," he said, "and I have quite a bit of pain about what I'm leaving behind."

POLICE BRIEFS

Officer almost shot during standoff

A shot fired by a Eugene man narrowly missed a Eugene police officer early Tuesday morning following an argument between the man and his wife and later a three-hour standoff between the man and police officers, a police report stated.

Shortly after 2:30 a.m., David Gordon Baker, 56, was arrested and charged with attempted aggravated murder and also with outstanding DUI warrants.

Baker's wife, Rachel Baker, 58, told police that her husband had been drinking for two days and an argument ensued. She also said her husband threatened to shoot the police if they responded to the call.

Officers arrived at the residence at 9:56 p.m. and attempted to enter the apartment. During the attempt to enter, officers heard a gunshot inside the apartment after which they retreated and called the Eugene Police Department/Lane County Sheriff's Office SWAT Team.

Once the SWAT team arrived, attempts were made to negotiate with Baker, who refused to respond to police calls. At approximately 2:30 a.m., the SWAT team attempted to gain entry into the apartment. During the attempt, Baker fired a shot through the wall next to the front door where officers were positioned, police said.

The shot narrowly missed Sgt. Jay Shadwick, after which the SWAT team retreated and again attempted to negotiate with Baker. Baker appeared at the front door unarmed a few minutes later and was taken into custody.

Transient stabbed in store parking lot

A 22-year-old Eugene transient was stabbed three times Saturday evening in the Fred Meyer parking lot on West 11th Avenue, a police report stated.

Jonathan Paul Martin was stabbed by an acquaintance after the two argued over a financial matter. Martin suffered wounds to the abdomen that did not appear to be life-threatening at the time.

The suspect is described as a Native-American male between the ages of 12 and 14, five feet, five inches tall, weighing about 130 pounds, with black hair. He was wearing a red shirt and was last seen in the company of an older male who may be a resident of the Whiteaker neighborhood.

Police claim man burned 10-month-old

A Eugene man was arrested early Sunday morning and charged with causing burn injuries to a 10-month-old infant under his temporary care and custody, a police report stated. Jason Carl Royer was arrested Sunday at 3:10 a.m. The weapon used in the assault was a handheld hair dryer.
