Women: Washington still in AP top 25 at 7-6

It looks like the race for second place is much more interesting at this point.

This girl's tough!

Stanford forward Kristin Folkl broke two fingers in her right hand a couple of weeks ago, but don't think a couple of broken bones can keep her out of action—or from playing well.

With a splint over the broken fingers, Folkl still poured in 19 points on UCLA last week. She missed just one game because of the injury.

Add Stanford — one last time

With Stanford's 91-63 win over Southern California last Saturday, Cardinal head coach Tara VanDerveer earned her 300th victory as coach at the school.

In 12 seasons leading the Cardinal, VanDerveer has compiled an overall mark of 300-64, including five NCAA Tournament Final Four appearances and two NCAA championships.

Her overall coaching record in 19 seasons is 452-120.

Why the Huskies?

What is it with Washington, anyway, that has the national media captivated with the Huskies?

First of all, the Huskies continue to be ranked in the Associated Press top 25 poll every week despite the fact that their 7-6 Pac-10 record has them in fifth place in the conference standings.

Meanwhile, Oregon (14-7, 10-

3) has beaten the Huskies twice and is tied for second in the conference but hasn't been ranked all season and received just 23 votes this week.

Then there's UCLA, also in a second-place tie in the conference and three games ahead of the Huskies. The Bruins also beat Washington (80-59 on the road Jan. 29), but like Oregon they haven't been ranked all season either.

And I thought it was what you did at the end of a season that is important. Obviously, Washington's 10-0 record to begin the season has left some sort of an impression on the voters. Maybe when Washington gets demolished by Stanford Thursday, the voters will finally come to their senses and leave the Huskies out of next week's top 25.

The Fox Sports Network also seems to be buying into the Husky hype, choosing to broadcast Saturday's California at Washington game instead of some other marquee matchup—such as Oregon at Arizona.

Oh, maybe the No. 8 team in the nation out for revenge against one of the top teams in the conference just doesn't seem as exciting as the mighty Huskies hosting those awfully (and we'll stress the word "awful") exciting 5-17 Bears.

sports under consideration by the athletic department. However, Moos said the new team may not even be a current Club Sports team.

Crew, water polo and swimming are Club Sports teams, but Vaughn said the swimming team is not currently participating in events.

SPORTS BRIEFS

UO golf team finishes in sixth

The Oregon men's golf team retained its sixth-place standing after the third and final round of the Taylor Made/Waikoloa Intercollegiate tournament in Kona, Hawaii on Sunday.

The Ducks' team score of 10-over-par 874 was 18 strokes behind UNLV. Texas Christian was second at 863, and Arkansas was third at 867.

CORRECTION

The caption for the photo that went with story, "Finley goes out in style with a win over the Beavers" (ODE, Feb. 16) should have said "Kevin Keeney holds down the Beavers' Eric Carter during Keeney's 7-2 victory at 167 pounds." The Emerald regrets the error.
