ASUO: Candidates want low student fees

incoming freshmen about the student conduct code and campus issues such as rape, eating disorders and drinking.

Hemingway and Bostic want to revamp student government so it will be realistic and fight for student needs instead of using the ASUO to meet personal goals, pet projects or political payoffs.

"This is not a resumé-padding experience," Bostic explained. "We want to make all the incipient things stop."

Personal agendas in student government annoy them, Hemingway and Bostic said.

"Let's start with the basics — managing the incidental fee and doing this voluntarily, not as a training ground for politics," Hemingway said.

Next year the incidental fee could fall under attack in the state legislature. Hemingway and Bostic vow to keep student fees down and manage the fee responsibly to show the legislature they can be responsible with funding. This credibility will allow them to lobby for a tuition break or freeze.

Bostic is not opposed to capping the incidental fee or cutting it. She said she believes student volunteers do more and better work than stipend workers.

They want a working partnership with the administration to meet students' needs. They also suggest healing the relationship between students and the Eugene Police Department and the Office of Public Safety.

"Quite frankly, the Eugene police have a responsibility to understand this is college and drinking is going to happen," Bostic said. Hemingway and Bostic want to foster a better relationship with the police and public safety offices.

"Maybe it's time the ASUO throws a party to teach students how to throw a party," she said.
