ODE board selects summer editor

By Teri Meeuwse
Higher Education Editor

The Oregon Daily Emerald won't be going on vacation this summer—not with the new editor in town. Michael Hines, a junior, was named summer editor in chief at the Emerald Board of Directors meeting Tuesday. "I'm pretty excited," Hines said. "I can't wait until the summer starts. It will be fun picking up where Sarah left off and passing on the paper to Ryan." Sarah Kickler is the current editor in chief and Ryan Frank is the 1998 editor-elect.

"I think I've got experience and determination, and I'm really excited to do this," he said. Hines has been a student activities reporter for the Emerald since June 1997 and has also worked part-time at The Register-Guard as a sports worker since September. He is in the magazine sequence in the School of Journalism and Communication but is taking some news-editorial classes as well. "The board was very pleased with all of the candidates," said Holly Sanders, vice chairwoman of the board. "But Mike was an outstanding candidate for the position. His journalism experience and commitment to the Emerald make him an ideal candidate for the summer editor in chief." A summer editor-in-chief position was created in response to this year's internship situation, Kickler said. "When the board was in the process of hiring for the position for next year, both candidates had prior commitments to summer internships," Kickler said. "The board decided it would be in the best interest of the paper to hire someone separately for the summer editor position."
