Bulls embarrass Jazz in Game 3

Utah shot a combined 21 for 70 in its 96-54 loss to Chicago

By Chris Sheridan
The Associated Press

CHICAGO — The blowout was so complete it was historically stunning.

The Utah Jazz broke the record for fewest points in an NBA game since the inception of the shot clock as they were humbled 96-54 by the Chicago Bulls on Sunday in Game 3 of the NBA Finals. The wretched, sickly effort by the Jazz left them walking off the court appearing to have their confidence completely shattered.

The Bulls had the highest margin of victory in NBA Finals history and actually were doubled over laughing as the fourth quarter was being played out.

"Everybody had a good time out there," Michael Jordan said. "We came out and played hard. We put the effort and intensity in and as a result we could relax a little in the fourth quarter."

Utah's 54 points broke the NBA record of 55 set earlier this season by the Indiana Pacers and was 17 fewer than the Finals record of 71 by Syracuse in 1955 and Houston in 1981.

"I'm somewhat embarrassed for NBA basketball, for our guys to come out and have no fight at all," Utah coach Jerry Sloan said.

"They got all the loose balls and all the rebounds."

The victory gave Chicago a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven series, with Game 4 set for Wednesday night.

That will give the Jazz two full days to ponder their plight and try to figure out how they could become so hideous so quickly.

And this time, they can't blame Karl Malone.

After shooting 14-for-41 over the first two games of the series, Malone made his first six shots and finished 8-for-11 for 22 points.

But the rest of the team shot a combined 13-for-59, with Howard Easley (0-for-6), Bryon Russell, Greg Ostertag (1-for-7 each) and Jacques Vaughn (0-for-6) among the biggest offenders.

"We just didn't come ready to play," Malone said. "We just got an old fashioned butt-kicking. If this one don't wake us up, nothing will."

The Jazz also gave a new meaning to the term sloppy, finding every way imaginable to turn the ball over. Utah, which had 13 turnovers in Game 1 and 20 in Game 2, had 26 turnovers this time — including seven by Malone and five by John Stockton — which led to 22 Chicago points.

The Bulls got bigger-than-usual contributions from Ron Harper and Scott Burrell and 24 points out of Jordan. Toni Kukoc added 16 points, Scottie Pippen and Burrell had 10 each and every player on the team scored at least two.

It was so one-sided that Jordan amused himself during a fourth-quarter timeout by clowning with courtside reporters and watching the scoreboard video screen as fans did a limbo dance.

Malone sat out the entire fourth, just like Jordan, and watched Chicago go ahead by as many as 42 as the Bulls topped the old record margin of 35 by the Washington Bullets against Seattle in 1978.

Chicago also surpassed its own team record of a 33-point margin of victory in Game 1 of the 1992 Finals against Portland.

The Bulls broke this one open with a pair of first-half runs, a 12-0 spurt bridging the first and second quarters and a 12-2 run to close the first half that gave Chicago a 49-31 halftime lead.

The lead reached 23 early in the third, 28 late in the third and was at least 30 for most of the fourth.
