full-time business students by 239 percent and graduate students by 431 percent. Students frequently flow into the hallways for classes, and informal and formal meeting areas for students are nonexistent.

"We need to better serve the needs of our students," Murray said.

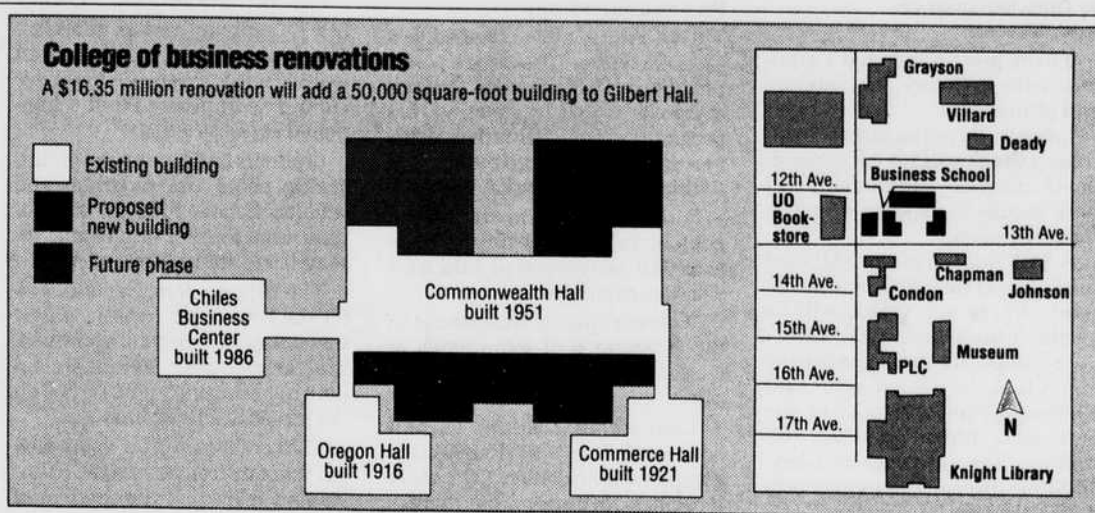

The needs of the students include accommodating modern teaching styles to benefit the educational process, Terborg said.

"The way work is being done is different, and the building just isn't keeping up," Terborg said.

Team projects, hands-on learning and integrating technology into the classroom are commonplace and necessary teaching tools now, Murray said. Renovation is necessary to facilitate these sorts of tools, he said.

Of the $16.35 million needed, $3.55 million will come from state matching funds and the remainder will come from private gifts and fund raising.

News Briefs

Pres. Frohnmayr to address campus

University President Dave Frohnmayr will discuss changes to meet the challenges of limited state funding, new student needs and the proposed state budget model in his State of the University Address today at 3 p.m. in 150 Columbia.

The address will begin at approximately 3:15 p.m. after a brief announcement and will be followed by the introduction of new faculty.

The State of the University Address will be available on the Internet after 3 p.m. Wednesday at <http://darkwing.uoregon.edu/~uo-comm/newsreleases/state-fuo.html>.

Multicultural Center to host receptions

The Multicultural Center will host two opening receptions for students today.

Information about the MCC and its resources will be available at an open house from 1-3 p.m.

The MCC offers a wide range of services to students, from opportunities to work on activist issues to its library of information on national and international issues.

Program advocate Huy Ong said the MCC "provides this campus with a way to network students with common concerns and issues that don't just include students of color."

APASU, the Asian/Pacific-American Student Union, will offer an informational meeting for people interested in joining today at 5 p.m. in the MCC. Free pizza will be provided.

APASU is looking for people to help with its newsletter and its Web page, as well as an applicant to fill a co-director position.
