Breast cancer affects men and women

Men with breast cancer often do not recognize the early warning signs

By Sarah Skidmore
Oregon Daily Emerald

For every 100 cases of women's breast cancer reported in the United States, one case of men's breast cancer is reported, according to the American Cancer Society.

According to the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation, the survival rate of men with breast cancer is lower than that of women. In 1998, an estimated 43,500 women and 400 men died from breast cancer, according to the society.

Although the survival of men and women is comparable by stage of disease at the time of diagnosis, men are usually diagnosed at a later stage, after the cancer has spread.

October is breast cancer awareness month — for men and women.

Breast cancer is a malignant tumor that develops from breast cells. A man's breast duct cells can undergo cancerous changes just as a woman's can. Breast cancer is much more common in women because women have many more breast cells than men do and possibly because their breast cells are constantly exposed to the growth-promoting effects of female hormones, according to the cancer society.

Signs of breast cancer in men, according to the Komen Foundation, include nipple discharge (usually bloody), nipple inversion, breast lumps and occasionally, pain, itching or a pulling sensation.

Small rudiments of breast ducts are found in the center of the breast, beneath the areola and nipple in men. The majority of male breast cancer cases occur in this area, rather than the outer quadrants, as is common in women's cases, according to the National Breast Cancer Organization.

According to the American Cancer Society, there is no known way to prevent male or female breast cancer. Known risk factors for male breast cancer according to the society are: aging, a family history of breast cancer, Klinefelter's syndrome — an abnormal chromosome pattern — radiation exposure to the chest, liver disease and estrogen treatment.

Male breast cancer can be found and treated early. However, quite frequently patients do not recognize the symptoms early on, according to the cancer society. It recommends a yearly cancer-related health check for all men and women 40 years and older.

Detection and treatment of breast cancer in men is similar to the methods used on women. Breast cancer is the most frequently reported type of cancer in new cases in women. However, men are at a much higher risk for other forms of cancer, according to the cancer society.

Men should be more concerned about prostate, lung, colo-rectal and bladder cancer, according to the society.
