The event raises money for the co-sponsorship fund run by the ASUO

For some students, the sights and smells of the ASUO Street Faire linger much longer than three days on campus.

Today the Faire returns to campus through Friday with 27 food booths, 78 craft booths and 12 non-profit organization booths. Tiffany Fine, ASUO Street Faire coordinator, projects the Faire will generate $9,288 for the ASUO.

The money earned during the Faire goes to the ASUO co-sponsorship fund, which provides as much as $200 for any student group that requests co-sponsorship.

"It has always been a fund-raiser, but it hasn't always been this large," Fine said. "It takes a while to get that reputation."

Space for booths goes fast, said Fine, who had to turn away more than 20 applicants this year for lack of space.

She added that there are some applications that she can't accept. "We had one vendor who wanted to sell bong, and we had to refuse them," she said.

Fees for the three-day Faire cost $20 for non-profit organizations, $90 for craft vendors and $190 for food vendors.

Fine advertises to vendors from a database of more than 350 vendors. ASUO rents 8 feet by 10 feet spaces on a first-come first-serve basis, Fine explained.

Dana's Cheesecake Bakery, a perennial Faire vendor, has attended since 1980.

Colleen Bauman, co-owner and co-founder of Dana's Cheesecake Bakery, remembers a request from a student who wanted one of the cheesecakes sent across the country.

The student was a scientist working at the North Pole, and Bauman sent the cheesecake to her family reunion because she could not attend.

"It's not the most profitable part of our business," Bauman said. "But you have to look at it in the long range and see that you're building clientele."

Ritta's Burritos, another student favorite, appreciates students' steady patronage, founder Ritta Dreier said.

"After cutting down on some of the fairs, we really want to hold onto the Street Faire because students are so loyal," Dreier said.

Besides renting to food vendors, Fine works hard to fund entertainment during the event.

"Whenever we cut costs somewhere else, we can apply those funds to music," she said.

The ASUO is co-sponsoring music in the EMU Amphitheater for two days of the fair. Walker T. Ryan, a local blues guitarist, will appear both days beginning at 10:30 a.m. Today, The Atilla and Dave Project, a San Francisco group, will follow Ryan from 12:15 to 1:45 p.m.

The budget is tight, but the benefits are worthwhile, Fine said.

"Atilla and Dave are going to be staying at my apartment. We treat our people well and try to bring them back in."
