

Journalism school honors faculty, alumni

A special dinner tonight will recognize the first 14 inductees to a future 'Hall of Achievement'

Students need to remember the long tradition of excellence that has come from within the School of Journalism and Communication, school Dean Tim Gleason said.

Fourteen distinguished alumni and faculty, who are role models of that excellence, will have their achievements inscribed in the new Hall of Achievement in Allen Hall.

"These individuals stand as leaders and role models to students who attend the school now," Gleason said. "These are all people who made a difference."

The Hall of Achievement was made possible through a "leadership gift" from the Baker family who owns The Register-Guard, Gleason said. The awards will be on display in a seminar room that will be built as part of the ongoing Allen Hall renovations.

The first group of inductees will be honored at a dinner at 6 p.m. at the Valley River Inn, 1000 Valley River Way, Eugene. Black tie is optional and tickets are $50.

The Blue Ribbon Hall of Achievement Selection committee chose inductees from a pool of 70 nominees who made outstanding accomplishments in their professional fields and communities. Nominations were made by alumni across the country.

Gleason said the criteria for eligibility was whether the nominee was a graduate of the school, a former faculty member or if the person took significant course work in the school.

"We were looking for outstanding achievement," Gleason said.

Some of the inductees include: Paul Brainerd, founder and president of Aldus Corp., maker of PageMaker software; E. Palmer Hoyt, former publisher of The Oregonian and The Denver Post; Helen Angell Kitchen, director of African studies at the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington, D.C.; Tom McCall, former Oregon governor; Lucile McDonald, author of popular fiction and history, and a pioneering woman journalist; Richard Neuberger, former U.S. senator, newspaperman and nonfiction author; and Fred Taylor, former executive editor of the Wall Street Journal.

Imagine trying to do a research paper without books, the Internet, or software on your computer...

It'd be like trying to swim without arms, or legs...totally helpless.

Gives you a sinking feeling, doesn't it?

So does Measure 59.

If the backers of Measure 59 have their way, every voter in Oregon will be set adrift come election time...left to fend for themselves when it comes to making an informed decision on how to vote. Why? The voters' pamphlet, one of our primary resources for information on ballots and candidates, will be totally gutted.

The Oregon Supreme Court already confirmed this, stating Measure 59 would make it illegal to have any statements supporting or opposing candidates or ballot measures in the voters' pamphlet.

Worse yet, Measure 59 employs such vague language regarding the use of political money, it could lead to a wave of uncharted legal challenges. For instance, does Measure 59 prohibit student fees from being used to help prevent unnecessary tuition increases? These are the kinds of questions that will have to be answered -- most likely in expensive court battles -- if Measure 59 slithers by the voters on November 3rd.

You depend on the voters' pamphlet to present both sides of the issues. Keep Measure 59 from making shark bait out of the voters' pamphlet...and your vote.

Vote NO on 59.
