said. "We think Oregon is a fine team. Their record is deceiving. Madeline Ernst and Alli White played very disciplined volleyball in that game."

But once the Trojans (13-4, 6-2) made adjustments to contain Ernst and White, Oregon never regained its composure. Ernst, the nation's leader in kills per game, was denied any kills in Game 2, and White sat out after feeling pain in her knee. The effects were devastating for Oregon. The Ducks had just 12 kills and a .053 attack percentage.

"We felt like we needed to get the ball to our quick attackers more frequently," Love said. "We rotated the lineup to change the match ups and extend the rallies longer."

The changes paid off and the Trojans tallied 19 kills and just three errors for an amazing .552 attack percentage.

Oregon made changes of its own in Game 3 inserting Redshirt freshman Annie Pogue, who sat out in both Games 1 and 2. The changes were too little too late, however, and the Ducks went down 1-9 and never rallied back.

"In Game 3 we were playing catch up," Ernst said. "We need to find a way to just play volleyball. We can say it everytime, but the fact is, we need to control our side of the net."

Leading the Trojan attack were seniors Jasmina Marinkovic and Jennifer Kessy, who recorded 14 and 22 kills, respectively.

"We dug really well and played good defense," Marinkovic said. "We just played at a quicker pace than they did."

The Trojans out killed (62-49), out dug (46-28) and outblocked (7-4) the Ducks and had only 17 total errors to Oregon's 30.

Oregon tennis heads to Husky Invitational

Six members of the Oregon women's tennis team will be seeing their first action of the season Friday as the Ducks compete at the Husky Invitational in Seattle.

The line-up, which includes three Oregon freshman who will play their first collegiate match, will join players from Boise State, Idaho and Washington State.

Oregon head coach Jack Griffin said he expects his players to pick up valuable experience against Washington and Washington State's second, third and fourth seeded players.

"[The tournament] is not unbelievably strong," Griffin said. "But it'll be a good start to the season."

Three flights of singles and doubles competition will be played in the individual tournament that will begin Friday and end Sunday.

The two Oregon players who won't be attending the tournament are Alina Wygonowska and Sarah Colistro, who spent the beginning of last week competing at the All-American Tournament in Los Angeles.

Colistro began play Saturday and went on to win two matches. Wygonowska lost her first two and was eliminated.

Following the Invitational, the Ducks play Nov. 6 at the Rolex Regional Tournament in Moraga, Calif. Oregon's first team competition will be at the end of January.

Goalkeeper Lindsay Culp leads the Pac-10 in goals-against average with a sparkling .55 mark and has made 57 saves.

UCLA mauled Oregon 6-0 in Eugene last season on its way to a perfect 9-0 conference record and advanced to the quarterfinals of the NCAA Tournament.

With a conference-best 31 wins the past two seasons and a pre-season ranking as high as No. 19, USC (8-6-1, 2-2) expected big things this season.

Heading into their 1 p.m. Sunday match at Los Angeles Coliseum against the Ducks, the Trojans have performed inconsistently.

Following road losses to Washington and Washington State on the opening weekend of conference play, USC evened its Pac-10 record with impressive home victories against Stanford and Cal last weekend.

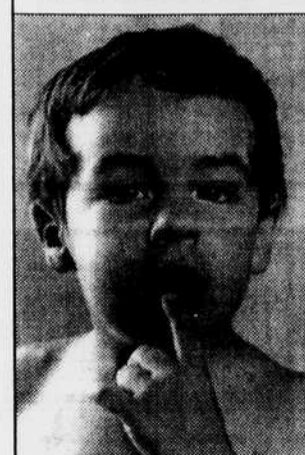

Midfielder Kim Clark is the Trojans' marquee player. She earned third-team all-American honors last season and has tallied 26 career goals. The junior leads USC with seven goals and 19 points this season. In the winter, Clark is a shooting guard for the women's basketball team.
