Take Your Real-World Skills To A Real-World Job

You made it look professional on paper. Now put your skills into action with a challenging opportunity at Target. You're looking for a way to brighten your post-graduation prospects—we're looking for hard-working Seniors who are interested in learning the ins and outs of retail.

Our Fall Semester Internships give Juniors and Seniors with excellent interpersonal skills a chance to gain valuable experience as Jr. Executives. You'll train with Team Leaders and Executives for three months, honing your leadership skills and beefing up your resume. If we're impressed with your work, you'll be a prime candidate for a managerial-level position come graduation.

We also have exciting Executive Team Leader opportunities available for successful Fall Semester grads. You'll oversee merchandising, guest services or human resources while learning to thrive in our competitive industry. In preparation, you'll receive 8 weeks of Business College and 4 weeks of position-based training.

Everyone knows Target is one of the nation's largest upscale discounters, but what you may not know is that we offer great salaries, a relaxed work environment and opportunities to advance based on ability, not seniority. Our Team Leader opportunities pay $30,000 and offer full benefits, including medical/dental/life insurance and a 401(k) plan. We will be on campus during the Career Fair on November 4. Stop by to speak with a Target Representative to learn more about these fantastic opportunities to translate your skills into a Real-World Job, or contact the University of Oregon Career Development Center. ## Cross country

Davis said the Ducks are not intimidated by the Cardinal.

"We have the capability to run with Stanford," Davis said. "In running, it doesn't matter how good you are. You're only as good as the day you race."

Davis and Fein will lead the Ducks into tomorrow's meet. Also running will be Rob Aubrey, Micah Davis, Greg James, and Lincoln Nehring. Andrew Bliss earned the seventh spot on the roster by finishing fifth overall at the Oregon Invitational.

In most cases, the hometeam has an edge over the competition because it would be familiar with the playing grounds. However, the squad that will run on Saturday — with the exception of Bliss — sat out of the Oregon Invitational to rest.

"We won't have any advantage racing at home because we haven't even ran on the course yet," Dellinger said. "But we will be accustomed to the weather and the terrain."

For many members of the cross country team, the start of next season will mark the beginning of yet another story. But this year's story has been special, and the Ducks would like to finish it with happy ending.

"It will be a fun way for Dellinger to go out in his last home meet," Davis said. "He's the coolest coach you can run for. For our team to do well, people will have to step forward. I'd be flaming if we didn't get second."

been recognized plenty outside the state for our accomplishments, but never really at home."

The hey day of men's cross country at Oregon ran from about the late 1960s, when Dellinger first took over the head coach position, to the mid-to-late 1970s. During that stretch, the Ducks won four NCAA Championships and finished second six times.

Those were great Oregon teams, comprised of some exceptional individual athletes: Steve Prefontaine, Ken Moore, Rudy Chapa and Alberto Salazar just to name a few.

But it has been nearly a decade since Oregon cross country was a force on the national level. Stanford, the two-time defending national champion, and Arkansas, which won the the four previous NCAA titles before the Cardinal, are the new kings of the sport.

But does anyone care?

"I've always thought of cross country as just the foundation of track and field," Dellinger said. "It's never really bothered me that we haven't gotten the recognition."

But it should.

Oregon has never before hosted a Pacific-10 Conference Championship in cross country, before this Saturday's race at Alton Baker Park. And it has still never come close to hosting a regional or national meet.

Part of the problem is the weather. Part of the problem is politics, but Oregon — arguably the most successful cross country team in the history of the sport — has never been able to run a big meet with a home-field advantage. Yet they've been able to win year in and year out.

"Imagine what people would say about the athletic tradition at this school if our football or basketball teams had had that much success," Dellinger said.
