 backs Redmond and Michael Martin accounted for 285 yards rushing and three touchdowns as Arizona State recorded 405 rushing yards and 623 total yards.

"We've talked about this game for a long time with our players," Bellotti said, "and the importance of what we have to do from a physical standpoint at the line of scrimmage."

To continue their late-season recovery and beat Oregon, the Sun Devils will have to overcome multiple obstacles, according to Arizona State head coach Bruce Snyder.

"[The Ducks] have terrific fans who are excited about their team, the weather is quite a bit different than it is in Tempe right now, and it's on AstroTurf," said Snyder, who graduated from Oregon in 1962 and is 3-3 against his alma mater. "So we've got a number of different things that we need to manage."

Managing a win will be that much more difficult for the Sun Devils if Kealy and Redmond are unable to play.

"Those are two real key players in our overall scheme," Snyder said.

Redmond, who leads the Pac-10 with a 173.6 all-purpose-yardage average and ranks second in the conference with nearly 93 rushing yards per game, is listed as probable after missing two games with a sprained right ankle.

Although he had arthroscopic surgery on cartilage in his right knee Monday, Kealy will be on Arizona State's 60-man roster and will make the trip to Eugene. Whether he will be able to start will not be known until game time, according to Snyder. Kealy has passed for 1,650 yards, 15 touchdowns and seven interceptions this season.

If Kealy is indeed held out, senior Steve Campbell or redshirt freshman Chad Elliott will start at quarterback. In the second half against the Golden Bears, Campbell completed 7-of-11 passes for 106 yards and a career-high three touchdowns in his last home game. Elliott started against the Cardinal and has thrown for 341 yards and two touchdowns on 65 attempts this season.

At least the Sun Devil offense does know that its talented trio of wide receivers — Lenzie Jackson, Kenny Mitchell and Tariq McDonald — will be in action. The three have combined for 85 receptions and 13 touchdown catches.

Despite having just three returning defensive starters from last season, Arizona State's defense is ranked No. 4 in the Pac-10.

As would be expected of the Sun Devils' only returning starters, Jackson, defensive tackle Albrecht Battle and safety Mitchell Freedman are three of the team's best defensive players. Jackson has three interceptions and 41 tackles, Battle owns 2 1/2 sacks among his 12 tackles for loss, and Freedman, who is nicknamed "Fright Night" for his devastating hits, has made 40 tackles and intercepted one pass.

Linebacker Adam Archuleta leads the team in tackles with 67, tackles for loss with 14 and sacks with four.

Although Arizona State may not be having the kind of season the experts predicted it would, Snyder said the team has remained unified throughout the frustrations.

"The realization has set in that we are what we are," Snyder said. "We can only be what we can be, as oppose to living up to someone else's expectations." With a win Saturday, the Sun Devils could be a bowl team for the fourth straight season.
