

Biologist wins 1998 Discovery Award

University biologist Charles Kimmel won the 1998 Discovery Award for his work with zebrafish.

The award, given annually by the Oregon Health Sciences Foundation, recognizes Oregon scientists who have made significant original contributions to biochemical research.

Kimmel, a member of the University Institute of Neuroscience, is a leading developmental biologist who uses zebrafish to learn how early embryonic cells help form body tissues and organs. This work helps explain early development in vertebrate species, including humans.

Consolidated student loan deadline Jan. 31

Time is running out to consolidate school loans to receive the special interest rate offered by Congress.

Applications must be received by January 31 for borrowers to receive a 7.46 percent interest rate. After the deadline, the rate will increase to 8.25 percent. By consolidating loans, borrowers eliminate the hassle of multiple payments.

Out-of-school borrowers with federal loans, parents with PLUS loans and a select set of in-school borrowers — those who only hold direct loans — are eligible to use the special interest rate. All other in-school borrowers must wait until February 1 to consolidate.

The 7.46 percent interest rate is available through the U.S. Department of Education's Direct Loan Program and is also being offered by some private lenders. To consolidate, borrowers can call the Department of Education's consolidation hotline at 1-800-557-7392, can complete a direct loan application on-line at www.ed.gov/DirectLoan/consolid2.html.
