Fulbright

Republic to gather information for a dissertation.

She conducted dissertation research on village life and how changes in agriculture from collective to private farming affected families and village life.

"What was so great about the Fulbright was that it provided the support I needed, in terms of research opportunities, while also giving me the freedom to do my field work," Vanderkar said. "I felt the Fulbright was really a gift because it enabled me to do what I needed while being covered financially."

To apply for the Fulbright scholarship, students submit a proposal, a personal statement, references and a transcript. Afterward, candidates are interviewed and then undergo the customary yearlong wait before learning of their status.

Applications for the Fulbright become available in April and are due in October. Candidates do not learn whether they have won the grant until April of the following year.

"It was hard to wait to know whether or not I had received the Fulbright," Vanderkar said. "I waited a year before I found out I had won and then I left for the Czech Republic a week later."

Vanderkar believes receiving the Fulbright allowed her to better understand the culture of another country. The cut in Fulbright funding, to Vanderkar, is very disappointing.

"The mission of the Fulbright is to promote global understanding, and I saw that while I was abroad," Vanderkar said. "By being there, I got to know real people and they got to know me. I had the opportunity to see the real side of another country's culture. This cutback is unfortunate because it will prevent people from learning about one another and it will prevent the one-to-one experiences that are essential for people to form connections with each other."

For Vanderkar, her own experiences in the Czech Republic changed the way she saw life.

"Through this program I was able to see a slice of life that I would have not otherwise been able to experience," Vanderkar said. "I got to learn a lot about myself in terms of strengths and weaknesses, and just by being there, I got to form friendships that will last a lifetime. It was really an amazing, life-changing experience."
