

The University of Oregon presents...

Dr. John Gardner

Professor of Physics, OSU

who will discuss disability and technology from a professional and personal viewpoint.

Tuesday, April 13, 4:00 pm
Knight Library Browsing Room
reception following

Disability Awareness Day

An Art Exhibit

by artists with disabilities and disability-related art will be displayed in the EMU Lobby from 10:00 am — 3:00 pm

Sponsored by the Disability Project Committee for more information or to request accommodations, contact Disability Services at 346-3211.

Interpreting &
Real-Time Captioning
Provided

006232

HOLOCAUST REMEMBRANCE WEEK

YOM HASHOAH

APRIL 11 - APRIL 17, 1999 UNIVERSITY OF OREGON

Sunday, April 11

"The Long Way Home" — Morgan Freeman narrates this documentary which details the plight of Holocaust survivors between the last years of W.W.II and the formation of the State of Israel. In addition to new interviews, film clips and stills, the film is also narrated in the words of those who personally experienced the atrocities.

2:00 - 4:00 p.m., PLC room 180

Monday, April 12 - Tuesday, April 13

Reading of the Names — The 24 hour reading of the names of those killed by the Nazis in the Holocaust; Memorial service to be held 15 minutes before and after the reading.

8:00 p.m. - 8:00 p.m., Amphitheater

Tuesday, April 13

Issues of Memory: Susi Rosenberg — A resident of Munich, Germany, Susi is an established German sculptor who explores memory through her art. She will discuss what and how we choose to remember. A documentary film ("Silent Witness") will be shown about Holocaust survivors who lead tours of concentration camps. This will be followed by a discussion with Rosenberg, who is the daughter of a survivor.

7:00 p.m., EMU Ben Linder Room

Wednesday, April 14

The Holocaust as a product of History: Paul Kopperman — The history of antisemitism and how it led to the "Final Solution."

12:00 - 1:30 p.m., EMU Ben Linder Room

Other Genocides Night — An evening exploring other modern genocides worldwide with speakers, activism resources, letter writing, and discussion.

6:00 - 9:00 p.m., EMU Ben Linder Room

Thursday, April 15

Intergenerational Panel — Holocaust survivor, Esther Wasserman, her daughter Shirley Langer, and her granddaughter, a U of O student, will discuss how the Holocaust has affected their lives as individuals and as a family. Open discussion and questions are welcome and encouraged.

7:00 - 9:00 p.m., Knight Library Browsing Room

Friday, April 16

Holocaust Remembrance Shabbat

6:30 p.m., University Hillel, 1059 Hilyard St.

Wednesday, April 14

"On Wings of an Angel: History and the Redemptive Power of Art": Akiva Segan — A renowned artist based in Seattle, Washington, Akiva will present his exploration of history and memory through art. A slide presentation on the history of the Holocaust as well as a display of Akiva's recent work will be followed by discussion.

12:00 p.m., Knight Library Browsing Room

Issues of Memory Panel — Susi Rosenberg joins Akiva Segan to present their art and discuss the memorialization of the Holocaust and the Power of aesthetics to condemn or liberate. The panel will be followed by a reception.

1:30 - 3:00 p.m., Knight Library Browsing Room

Any Questions? Call the Jewish Student Union at 346-4366

The following groups have contributed to these events: The Jewish Student Union; Hillel; Oregon Humanities Center; CSWS; Office of International Studies; Department of Fine and Applied Arts; Department of Germanic Languages and Literatures; Survival Center.

006243

FIND THINGS IN ODE CLASSIFIEDS (BICYCLES, PETS, CARS, JOBS, ROOMMATES, APARTMENTS, CONCERT TICKETS, PLANE TICKETS, STUFF YOU LOST, TYPING SERVICES, ON-CAMPUS OPPORTUNITIES)

Lambright dismisses post-dismissal suit

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Jim Lambright, fired in December as head football coach at the University of Washington, said Monday he will not sue the school over his dismissal.

Lambright said at a news conference his problem was with one individual, not the school. He did not name the individual.

In February, Lambright said he was unhappy about the severance package offered him and might bring a lawsuit over it. He said that after 30 years of service, he felt he deserved better than to be shown the door and handed a $276,000 severance deal.

"This is my school," he told The Seattle Times then. "I don't want to be made out a bad guy at a school I lived and died for, but after six weeks it appears my only recourse is going to court."

Lambright was fired in December after six years as head coach — a period in which the Huskies won 60 percent of their games. He was replaced two weeks later by Rick Neuheisel, who is being paid $7 million over seven years.

In all, Lambright spent 35 years with the Huskies as a player, assistant coach and head coach. His severance package was, by contract, one year of $176,000 in base salary plus a $100,000 retirement annuity.

Lambright had refused to cash any of the checks he received, saying that would indicate he had accepted the terms.

UW Athletic Director Barbara Hedges, who made the decision to fire Lambright, said her hands were tied on the matter of severance.

"Certainly, I understand where Jim is coming from," she told The Times. "The reality is we have a commitment both parties worked on for a long time. The contract is clear. The university won't allow me to do any more because it is outside the contract."

"We addressed 90 percent of Jim's needs in the last negotiations and the termination clause was never even discussed."

At his news conference Monday, Lambright said he is taking a position as head of a charitable group called "A Better World," a non-profit arm of the Seattle-based Pacific Institute, which specializes in motivational speakers.

Lambright was sued last week by former Washington quarterback Shane Fortney over Lambright's handling of Fortney's 1996 knee injury.

That lawsuit, filed Thursday in Snohomish County Superior Court in Everett, about 30 miles north, seeks unspecified damages. It contends Fortney's pro-football prospects were hurt by Lambright's "reckless, malicious and unreasonable treatment" over the injury.

Lambright, commenting on the lawsuit Monday, said whether a player plays is up to the medical staff, not the coach.

Sammy not so super in early-season struggles

By Rick Gano

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Back home at Wrigley Field where his every move, gesture and smile is greeted with cheers and chants of his name, Sammy Sosa wanted desperately to please, to give everyone who came what they wanted to see.

Instead, his struggles at the plate continued. Not only didn't he homer, he managed just one hit — a measly dribbler in the infield — as the Chicago Cubs lost their home opener to the Cincinnati Reds 7-2.

The Reds had no power problems. Mike Cameron, who never fulfilled his potential on the other side of Chicago with the White Sox, hit two of Cincinnati's four homers as the Reds gave the Cubs a fourth straight loss.

"I wish I could have a hit or homer every time," said Sosa, who went 1-for-4, dropping him to 3-for-25 for the season with one homer.

"Now the pitchers don't want to give me anything to hit. I got to be patient and relaxed, keep rolling. We're struggling, but it's still early. A lot of people cheered me, and they know I'm in a slump and that we can play better."

Sosa came to bat with two on and no outs in the eighth against reliever Scott Sullivan with the Cubs trailing 5-2. He flied out to shallow right, ending his frustrating day before a spirited crowd of 30,092.

"I'm not swinging the way I'm supposed to be. I've been chasing bad pitches," Sosa said. "I've got to come and find out what's the matter."

Steve Avery (1-1) got his first NL victory since 1996, and Barry Larkin and Eddie Taubensee also homered for the Reds.

"I had a tough time here in Chicago last year. I put entirely too much pressure on myself," said Cameron, who was traded away in the off-season by the White Sox. "I had to believe in myself before anybody else could. This was one of the best feelings I've ever had."

The Cubs' depleted pitching staff got another scare when Kevin Tapani (1-1), a 19-game winner last season, had to leave after three innings with tightness in his right shoulder. He didn't know after the game if he would miss his next start.

The Cubs already are without NL rookie of the Year Kerry Wood, who will miss the season following elbow surgery, and reliever Terry Adams is also on the DL with an elbow sprain.

Tapani initially hurt the shoulder while batting last week in Houston and didn't want to take a chance this early in the season. He'll rest a couple days, do some exercises and take medication.

"It just grabbed on me," Tapani said. "It's a little sore. It's muscle-type stuff and I need to build up my strength. I'm not looking at it as a major thing. I just can't let it alter the way I throw."

Avery, who took a no-hitter into the seventh inning of his first start against the Giants before losing, allowed three hits in seven innings with five walks and five strikeouts.

"I took a little while to get going with the cold," Avery said of the sunny 49-degree day.

"I know how to change speeds now, and eventually with my fast-ball coming around, I will get more strikeouts. Once I get rid of the little blips like walks, things will be where I want."

Larkin hit a two-run homer in the third — his third of the year — off Tapani.