Chris Standish stands upon the newly built children's stage, one of many changes taking place in the University Bookstore. Standish expects completion in June.

Bookstore begins getting a makeover

The third floor remodel will create a more inviting atmosphere

Students may have some trouble finding books or cash registers in the University Bookstore these days, but officials say the confusion is for a good reason.

The bookstore is in the middle of a month-long renovation of its third floor, aimed at combining the course books and general books departments and revamping the store's "warehouse" image into a more inviting atmosphere, General Manager James L. Williams said.

The $25,000 remodel, which began last month and wraps up in a few weeks, includes moving books and shelves and adding a stage, which will be used for children's programs and book readings. Couches and carpet will also be installed.

Combining the two book departments will increase efficiency, Williams said.

"Now we have both teams working together, so the customer will be better served," he said.

The stage, being built near the north end of the store, will be used for "Children's Saturdays," a children's program including performances and storytelling.

"The stage is really meant to make the floor really comfortable for the people," Williams said.

Some students have responded positively to the changes.

Jennifer Cameron, a sophomore comparative literature major, likes the idea of a bookstore with a larger focus on children.

"I think it's important to have a place for kids because there are so many student-parents on campus and it looks comfortable," she said.

The renovation was scheduled for mid-term to avoid the book buying rush at the beginning of the term, Williams said.
