Gospel choir holds fund-raiser today

The group is raising money for operating expenses and traveling

Fans of the Lane County-based Inspirational Sounds Gospel Choir will have an opportunity to support the group at Oasis Fine Foods Market South today.

The group will be at Oasis from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. selling raffle tickets. Oasis will also donate 5 percent of its profits for the day to the choir.

"We consider this opportunity to be a tremendous blessing for our choir," said Carol Texley, the choir's vice-president.

Oasis holds several fund raisers throughout the year to benefit local groups. Oasis tries to center its fund-raising opportunities to benefit local environmental, arts, child-advocacy and homeless-related groups in the area, said Oasis marketing director Beth Bonamici.

"We try to promote pretty grass-roots groups that don't have a lot of funding," she said.

Interested groups go through an application process to participate in Oasis fund-raisers.

The opportunity to earn needed money was the main reason the choir wanted to get involved with Oasis, said choir conductor John Gainer, who is also a University adjunct music professor.

He said the fund-raiser "will be a boost to our general operating funds because our membership and performance attendance have been low."

Gainer said the choir, which performs throughout Lane County, had been hurt by extenuating circumstances that forced some members to withdraw from the choir.

The choir first filled out an application in September to participate in a fund-raiser and were notified of their selection in December.

Gainer said he was excited the choir, which desires to bring unity among diverse groups in the community, was selected.

"We were confident our group would have an opportunity to do this," he said.

That confidence wasn't misplaced, Bonamici said.

"The choir is fabulous, and their philosophy of promoting racial harmony is something that is very important to us," she said.

The choir hopes to raise $900 to $1,200, Gainer said. He added that the money would be used for operating expenses and trips.

Raising that amount of money won't be too difficult, Texley said.

"We have a pretty strong support group," she said.

Fans of the choir have supported it throughout its 16-years.

"I expect to see a lot of old faces" at Oasis, she said.

peace.

"It's a start where everyone is allowed to maintain their human rights," he said.

In addition to hollering protests and chalking the street in support, students also signed a sign: "The Top 1,000 Reasons to Stop the Bombing."

One reason given: "It's like policing NY City from a helicopter — people are killed, but the effectiveness is lacking."

Others read, "Missile Makers Own the Media" and "Students against bombing folks."
