Moving Guide

Rental

Echoing Fowlkes, Walsh said business gets crazier as graduation nears and recommends, if possible, a weekday rental.

Maybe you're not only a procrastinator, but lazy to boot. If even the mere thought of personally moving your stuff gives you the heebie-jeebies, professionals are available to carry out that dirty deed.

Most moving companies require a 1000-pound minimum for hire. Allied Van Lines has a contract with the University and relocates a lot of Ducks, said a local dispatcher who asks to remain unidentified.

He said Allied has been handling about three or four estimate requests a day, which equals the number of moves his company can accommodate. Waiting is a common game in the professional field as well, with early June a hectic time for rentals.

"You betcha," he said, laughing. "That's when

"[June] is when school's out and they all need to be moved yesterday."

school's out and they all need to be moved yesterday."

More important factors are involved with a professional moving company, said the dispatcher, because of space and locale; at 70 feet long and 13 feet high, these monster trucks need a lot of room to maneuver. If a person lives in the hills or some other remote location, a smaller truck is used to shuttle the person's belongings from house to moving van.

Estimates are difficult, too, he said, because people invariably can't decide what's going and what's staying.

"You go in to their house and look at their stuff," he explained, "and they'll say, 'Well, I might give this to Aunt Heddy, or this might go to Grandma, or I'll probably leave this for Junior.' Once we determine a price, however, it's guaranteed."

If you're leaving but your possessions are staying, at least for now, New Way Moving and Storage is available to stash property. Terry Hopper, an employee with New Way, pointed out that her company is different than those "come-and-go-as-you-please" mini-storage sites, but she believes her rates are favorable in comparison. With an 800-pound minimum per vault, rates run $1.50 per 100 pounds per month, with a one-time $3 handling charge.

Oh yeah, and don't wait until the last minute. Leave that for the insignificant matters, such as your thesis paper.
