drained that we didn't play well against Stanford on Sunday.

"We need to be better about playing well on both Friday and Sunday."

Fortunately for the Ducks, they are near 100 percent healthy. Starting forward Sierra Marsh has fully recovered from a hamstring injury that caused her to miss two preseason games, and defender Starr Johnson is healthy again after a long period of rehabilitation of a broken ankle she suffered in Oregon's 4-0 loss to Stanford last season.

The Ducks will need to be at full strength against Stanford and California, two teams who are ranked 1 and 3 respectively in the preseason Pac-10 coaches poll.

Stanford sports three players with five goals scored so far this season. And the Cardinal also returns Ronnie Fair, a first-team all-conference selection last season.

Stanford isn't short on young talent either, with a recruiting class ranking of No. 1 in the nation by Soccer America.

California is still on the brink of breaking into the top 25 after its bid for a national ranking was denied by Duke in the Blue Devils' 1-0 win last Sunday.

"I don't know if we panic or what. We do a good job of creating opportunities, but we have to finish them."

When all is said and done, according to McLanahan, the Ducks just need to "put the ball in the net."

"It's definitely mental," said McLanahan. "It's a mental disability we're having right now. When we have shooting opportunities, we have to take advantage."
