Free legal advice open to students

■ Many students are unaware that legal advice on many issues is available to them and is free of charge

If legalese is not part of your foreign language repertoire, ASUO Legal Services can help you make your case.

University students who pay incidental fees are eligible for free legal assistance as long as the adverse party is not another University student, faculty or staff.

Ilona Koleszar, one of the two staff attorneys at Legal Services, said landlord-tenant disputes, family law issues and misdemeanor criminal charges are the three most common issues students seek legal assistance for.

Koleszar said her clients' needs range from a quick question that often lacks a quick answer to advice and representation in longer lasting cases. Many cases are resolved through negotiations and only a few go to trial.

"There are usually a number of negotiation options that typically result in the resolution of the case," Koleszar said. She said she avoids going to court as much as possible as it is costly and time consuming and neither fits students schedules or budgets.

In cases where the adverse party is another University entity, Legal Services refers students to Conflict Resolution Services, lawyers in the community or Legal Aid Service of Lane County. Legal Services is funded by incidental fees and a minor amount of fund-raising.

Koleszar said she enjoys working for students and their wide-ranging needs.

"Students are a great group to work for," she said. "Every day is new and exciting."

Koleszar feels that the public has a misconception about who students are and what kind of financial resources they have at their disposal. She considers some of the fines coming from students pockets into those of the courts too high.

Koleszar said students are energetic and willing to do some of their own "leg work" when it comes to researching their cases.

Two law clerks, an assistant director and four work study secretaries currently support the two staff attorneys at Legal Services by doing administrative work and legal research.

Koleszar said approximately 1,200 students take advantage of Legal Services every year.

Linda Miller, assistant director at Legal Services, said students have a different outlook on many issues. Miller said the motto at Legal Services is "We fight long and hard for 10 bucks." She said the staff at Legal Services know that $10 can be a lot of money to a student.

ASUO President Wylie Chen said students are often taken advantage of, especially when it comes to landlord-tenant issues in a university neighborhood. He said Legal Services is an important voice for University students.

"It is crucial that we have some way to protect students," Chen said.

Stayner finally charged in Yosemite sightseers case

MARIPOSA, Calif. — A motel handyman who investigators say confessed to killing three Yosemite National Park sightseers in February was charged Wednesday with their murders.

Cary Stayner, 38, was charged with three counts of murder that could bring the death penalty.

Investigators said Stayner confessed in late July to killing Carole Sund, 42, her daughter Juli Sund, 15, and their Argentine friend Silvana Pelosso, 16, while the three were visiting the park in February.

He also allegedly confessed to beheading Joie Ruth Armstrong, a 26-year-old Yosemite naturalist, on July 21.

The Sunds and Pelosso were last seen alive at the Cedar Lodge motel where Stayner worked. Stayner was also charged with burglary, robbery, forcible oral copulation and attempted rape.

Stayner was arrested at a nudist camp two days after Armstrong's slaying and was later charged with her murder.
