■ The No. 10 Ducks on a roll heading into this weekend's Stanford Invite

By Jeff Smith

Oregon Daily Emerald

It's time to get back to work for the No. 10 Oregon women's golf team.

The Ducks travel down to Stanford to take part in the 36th annual Stanford Invitational that begins today and runs through Sunday.

It has been three weeks since the Ducks finished first at the Fall Nittany Lion Invitational at Penn State with their three day score of 885, the lowest three-round score in the history of the women's golf program.

The convincing East Coast win excited head coach Renee Baumgartner and proved that, as she put it, "the West is best."

West coast golfers will be on full display at the Stanford Invitational. Of the eighteen teams in the field, 13 are currently ranked in the nation's top 25.

The second-ranked Arizona Wildcats return to defend their 1998 title after they edged out the host Cardinal by two strokes a year ago.

Other ranked teams on hand include No. 4 Arizona State, host No. 5 Stanford, No. 9 UCLA, No. 12 Pepperdine, No. 13 Tulsa, No. 14 New Mexico State, No. 19 San Jose State, No. 22 New Mexico, No. 23 Washington.

The field is similar to the NCAA Fall Preview that the Ducks took part in on Sept. 13-15, where they finished in a seventh-place tie.

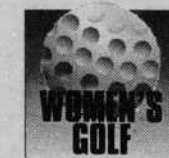

Oregon hopes to equal or better that finish this weekend, and there is a full squad of golfers whose confidence has been boosted by the Penn State scores.

Leading the way on the par 72, 6,154 yard course will be senior Pam Sowden, who is coming off an individual title at the Nittany Lion Invitational with her three round total of 210. In that tournament, Sowden's second round score of 68 tied the Oregon all-time individual score.

Alongside Sowden will be junior Jerilyn White. She was the Ducks top finisher at the Fall Preview and placed sixth overall at Penn State. Heading into the tournament, White is second on the team with a 76.1 average.

A talented senior trio of Angie Rizzo, Kylie Wilson, and Anika Heuser will also compete for Oregon.

The 54-hole event will feature five-player teams, and tally the lowest four scores per team. Competition will begin at 8 a.m. on all three days.
