Frohnmayer

Care System in Bethesda at 9 a.m. PDT where he was admitted into the Intensive Care Unit and listed in critical condition.

The president's condition from the arrhythmia — an interruption of the heart's normal rhythm — was upgraded to serious over the weekend, according to a statement released Saturday by his family.

"He will undergo a series of tests to determine both the cause and the treatment," the statement read.

Frohnmayer, 59, had no history of heart-related medical problems, said University Provost John Moseley, at a Friday press conference. In Frohnmayer's absence, Moseley will assume all administrative duties associated with the role of president.

"He is a very energetic and hard-working guy," Moseley said. "We never had a hint at any time that he had a problem."

In a letter to the campus, ASUO President Wylie Chen wrote Friday, "News of his medical condition has been received with shock and concern. The ASUO will proceed with respect for the Frohnmayer family as we offer our thoughts and wishes to them."

University spokeswoman Maureen Shine said her office was working with student leaders to notify the greater University community as his condition is updated.

"We want to be sensitive considering the subject matter," she said. "We're taking it one day at a time."

Frohnmayer has been on the East Coast attending a series of conferences since Monday and arrived in Bethesda on Wednesday for the event. Frohnmayer served on the National Institutes of Health advisory committee to the director.

Before coming to the University, Frohnmayer was a former Oregon Attorney General, serving for 11 years until his resignation to become dean of the University's School of Law in 1992. Deputy Attorney General David Schuman, who worked with Frohnmayer at the Attorney General's office and as a law professor at the University, said the news of Frohnmayer's condition quickly spread through the office.

"He is clearly one of the most influential and public figures of the state," he said.

Attorney General Hardy Meyers, who called Frohnmayer a friend, said, "I know I speak for all members of the Department of Justice in saying that our former colleague Dave will be in our thoughts and our prayers."

A Medford native, Frohnmayer lives in Eugene with his wife, Lynn, and three children. The Frohnmayers are founders of the Fanconi Anemia Research Fund, Inc. based in Eugene. Two of his three daughters, Kirsten and Katie, both died of Fanconi Anemia.

The Frohnmayers are also founders of the Fanconi Anemia support group, for similarly afflicted families around the world, and Frohnmayer is one of the founding directors of the National Marrow Donor Program.

Community reaction hearing the news. "He's been a wonderful friend to us at Lane and a leader to all of us in education."

As of Sunday afternoon, Frohnmayer remained in serious condition after having been improved from critical on Saturday, officials at Suburban Healthcare System in Bethesda, Md., said.

Gov. John Kitzhaber, who was in Portland when he heard of Frohnmayer's heart attack, "was shocked to hear the news," spokesman Jon Coney said. "His thoughts are with the Frohnmayer family."

As the news of Frohnmayer's condition spread across campus Friday, University students and faculty reacted.

"Certainly everyone in the School of Journalism and the University community is thinking of the Frohnmayers, and our prayers and wishes are with Dave," Tim Gleason, dean of the journalism school said. "We certainly hope for a speedy recovery."

ASUO President Wylie Chen issued a statement on behalf of the student body:

"In his years as our president, Frohnmayer has been dedicated and responsive to student issues. We encourage students to support the Frohnmayer family through this difficult time. He will continue to be in our thoughts, and our condolences go out to his family."

Frohnmayer has spent the last week off campus, attending conferences around the country including the American Association of Universities in Columbus, Ohio, on Monday.

"He's all the way in Maryland, and that's horrible," Melissa Unger, vice chair of the student board for OSPIRG, said. "I think that President Frohnmayer and the administration have done a good job of making sure that there is a solid administration on campus."

The Frohnmayer family expressed gratitude for the support of the community in a statement released Saturday.

"Our family is profoundly grateful for an overwhelming outpouring of support. We continue to be touched deeply by these expressions of concern."
