Career fair offers opportunities

Admissions expert Don Asher will kick off the career fair with a lecture

By Nick Haselwander

The activities for this week's Career Fair will kick off today with a presentation by a renowned expert on graduate and law school admissions. Don Asher has done extensive research on the topic and is the author of the book "Graduate Admissions Essays: What Works, What Doesn't and Why."

"(Asher) is the person in the speaking field that every career center would like to have because he is extremely knowledgeable," Career Center spokeswoman Virginia Garrison said.

Asher said a primary focus of his presentation will be to help students become more confident when applying to graduate schools.

"It is really a method of making students more empowered to apply to these elite graduate schools," he said.

Asher is a veteran of the college circuit and speaks at about 60 campuses around the nation every year. He said he received positive responses from students during a recent visit to the University of Colorado.

Asher said it is that positive feedback from students that motivates him.

"I think it's a self-satisfying process to help people, it's not just satisfying, it's intoxicating," he said.

Asher said that it is a goal of his to make his speech not only informative but entertaining as well.

"I promise that everyone will laugh because they will find something funny," he said. "If students apply what I tell them, they will be accepted by schools that would have otherwise turned them down."

Following the visit by Asher, the Career Fair will take place on Wednesday. In a change from previous years, the fair will be held in multiple sites in the EMU, although the EMU Ballroom will still be the primary location. Garrison said this change resulted from switching the fair from a two-day to a one-day Garrison said the fair will include a variety of different companies from all areas of the country. She said numerous law and graduate schools will also be in attendance.

Garrison said she hopes all students, not just juniors and seniors, will attend.

"We encourage freshman and sophomores to just walk through at least. They may just want to explore," Garrison said.

Hannah Unkefer, Career Center public relations student assistant, said the primary goal of the Career Fair is to help students get a start on their future.

diately receive the necessary treatment," the family's statement said.

"We look forward to resuming a full and active life following a period of recovery and recuperation."

Although doctors have been unable to identify a cause for the cardiac arrest, Frohnmayer's heart remains strong and there is no sign of permanent damage, according to the statement.

In response to the president's poor health, many community members have been sending their best wishes to Frohnmayer and his family. Freshman environmental studies major Keigo Nakaide set out to make 1,000 origami cranes to send to him.

In addition, the University Office of Communications and the campus Instructional Media Center set up a video camera last week University community members could send messages to Frohnmayer. Gov. Kitzhaber even stopped by Friday afternoon to send his best wishes.
