Childcare Subsidy budget tabled

By Edward Yuen
Oregon Daily Emerald

The ASUO Programs Finance Committee met Tuesday night and approved the budgets of another five ASUO programs, including that of the Oregon Marching Band, which was not heard when it was previously scheduled because of a grievance filed against the group earlier this month.

The PFC began to hear the budget of ASUO Childcare Subsidy, but the committee postponed approval until Thursday. PFC members spent almost an hour arguing the request filed by the ASUO Childcare Subsidy.

Members of the PFC expressed mixed ideas about whether money should be issued for childcare consideration funding and have decided to "table the budget for 48 hours." PFC members Aaron Weck and Alex Pederson said because the proposed budget of the group involved about a quarter of a million dollars, they need more time to consider the propositions before making any decision.

Among the remaining five programs, two of them will experience a slight increase in their budgets, two of them are allotted the same amount of money and one will experience a cut.

Both the Disability Services Project and the Oregon Marching Band will receive 0 percent change in their budgets for next fiscal year. Disability Services Project requested a no change, while the Oregon Marching Band originally requested a 2.6 percent increase in its budget, which it would have used to introduce new staff positions.

Land Air Water, a University law student organization that is devoted to public interest environmental law, received a 2 percent budget increase for the next fiscal year, and the Journal of Environmental Law and Litigation will experience a 2.4 percent increase in its budget.

The Student Bar Association will experience a 33 percent decrease in its budget next year. Weck accused the group of being negligent with previous funds. But Christine Connolly, SBA business officer, claimed that the careless use of funds last year was because of the ignorant decisions made by some ASUO comptrollers.

According to Shantell Rice, PFC chairwoman, the committee is trying to maintain a 0 percent benchmark as suggested by the Student Senate in fall 1999.

Members from the PFC will hear the appeals from MEChA and the Community Internship Program Thursday in addition to ASUO Childcare Subsidy.
