Hip-hop show hits Top of the World

Friday's show benefits the Hip-Hop Student Union at Lane Community College

The world of hip-hop music, Eugene style, gets a big-time showcase Friday night at Top of the World. Fourteen acts are scheduled to perform at the concert, which benefits the Lane Community College Hip-Hop Student Union.

Although a few of Friday's artists have performed everywhere from Miami to Seattle to New York City, a few will be getting their first major exposure.

"Four years ago, I started rappin' stuff and it's more like something you just do as a pastime," says Gabriel Sechrist, a business administration student at both the University and LCC. "Everybody I spoke to did pretty much the same thing — they had written lyrics, they had made songs, they presented them to their friends, but no one had beats or music, and especially no venue to perform at."
